deliver lectures on the theoretical problems of modern Russian language and literature on terms to be agreed separately.

- 8. Both sides agreed on the basis of reciprocity to exchange during the period of the programme two delegations from each side on agreed subjects to familiarize themselves with the various aspects of academic life and research in the institutions of higher learning in the receiving country. Each delegation will consist of up to five specialists and each visit will be for a period of up to two weeks.
- 9. Both sides agreed to study the question of mutual recognition of diplomas, degrees and certificates. To this end, during the first year of the programme, the two sides will exchange relevant information.
- 10. Each side may at its own expense send up to two representatives annually to the host country to familiarize themselves with the living and study conditions of exchange participants.
- 11. Both sides attach great importance to the reciprocal dissemination of the English and French languages and Canadian literature and the Russian language and Russian and Soviet literature and will within the limits of their jurisdiction, undertake to support all measures which lead to this aim, including the teaching of these languages throughout their entire educational systems as well as in educational broadcasts and telecasts.
- 12. The Canadian side informed the Soviet side of the growing interest among Canadian provinces in continuing to implement educational projects.
- 13. Both sides agreed to initiate in the near future an exchange of not more than two teachers of Russian and English and/or French respectively for a period of two months, to carry out practical work in intermediate level schools in Canada and the USSR. Both sides also agreed to consider