- If Vancouver is chosen as the host city for the 2010 Winter Games, Canada and British Columbia will each contribute $310 million for capital costs and for ongoing operations after the Games.
- Canada has also agreed to provide essential government services at no extra cost to the Games' organizers. The value of these services — such as customs, immigration and security — is estimated at $100 million. British Columbia has made a similar commitment.
- In December 2002, the Prime Minister committed more than $200 million for a joint project with British Columbia to expand the Vancouver Convention and Exhibition Centre. If Vancouver hosts the 2010 Winter Games, the expanded site will serve as the main press centre.
