PERU LAYS CLAIM TO ORIGIN OF JAZZ New York, May 18.—The shimmy, the one step and the jazz music, are as old as the hills and the ancient melody-loving inhabitants of Peru were the first to produce them. And to make their claim secure for all time they inscribed the figures of the dance on their prehistoric pottery and metal so that when future archaeologists sought proof of their claim there would be no doubt about it.

Sure enough, their claim to fame as the originators of the frots that make life worth while for a lot of light footed persons, has been found by Charles W. Mearns, assistant curator of the Department of Anthropology in the American Museum of Natural History.

This discovery, incidentally, blasts the theory that jazz was first a product of the 'now extinct' Barbary Coast in San Francisco where adventures since the days of '40 whirled with the girls of the dance hall.

And that isn't all—they have dug up from the ruins of old Peru such instruments of jazz as the drum, the symbol, the rattle, the pipe, the flute, the whistle, the trumpet and other devices of sundry character.

It is also recorded that the Huancas, a particularly warlike Peruvian tribe, made their drums from the skins of their enemies and the music, it is declared, was even more terrible than the jazz of today.

The ancient non-allegory of the jazz and shimmy is attested by the abundance of dancing figures on most of the pottery which has been unearthed and is in possession of the American Museum of Natural History.
