TARIFF COURT NOW IN MONTREAL

Three-Day Session of Sir Henry Drayton's Inquiry is Begun.

Montreal, Nov. 15.—Enormous development of this city under a moderate protective tariff was claimed by F. V. Stewart, on behalf of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association at the inquiry of the tariff commission, which opened a three day session here this morning. He showed how in 1900 there were 932 plants here as compared with 3,150 in 1918, the capital investment in manufacturing enterprises jumping from $7,148,661 to $468,401,480. Wages he said were six times greater in 1918 than in the first year of the century. The value of manufactured gods in 1918 was $628,979,956 as compared with $71,099,850 in 1900. He said the employees and their dependents supported by the manufacturing enterprises here equalled in number the entire population of Alberta. Mr. Stewart argued that there was urgent need for a greater amount of manufacturing in Canada.

One of the Most Popular Attractions Ever Presented at This Popular Theatre Will Be Here Three More Days —Other Big Features.

There is still another opportunity to see the week end bill at the Opera House see how a real motion picture is made and get into the movies yourself. Making movies is the stellar attraction on the bill and is without doubt one of the best features billed here this season. At every performance different scenes will be enacted and latter the full scenerio will be shown on the Opera House screen.

In addition to "Making movies" there are four vaudeville numbers as follows: The Harry Holmes players in an orginal comedy playet, "My Daughter's Husband"; Peddrick and De Vere, in a classy dancing and variety act; Tom Dooly, a comedy entertainer; The Sterlings, in a feature roller skating novelty, introducing a number of difficut and interesting dance steps. There is also the first episode of a new motion picture serial "Hidden Dangers", featuring Joe Ryan.

Owing to the extraordinary success of the big act "Making Movies", it will be held over for another three days. DIVORCE REFORM NEEDED IN MAINE THIS JUDGE SAYS

Great Increase in Number of Cases May Result in Legislation at Next Session of the State Legislature.

Portland, Me., Nov. 15.—Divorce in Maine has grown tremendously in the first hundred years of Statehood, according to Judge Loren M. Sanborn of the superior court of Cumberland county. In a recent statement the judge called attention to the fact that whereas but a single divorce action was entered in all the courts of Maine during the year 1820, there was entered last year in his court alone 338 such cases.

It is not at all improbable that the legislature, which assembles at Augusta on Jan. 5, will be asked to enact remedial legislation.

Judge Sanborn, in his discussion of the divorce evil, has made no definite suggestion of what such laws should be. He has contented himself with the statement:

"For my own part, speaking purely as an observer and one interested in better conditions, and not in any sense as one taking issue with the wisdom of the legislature, I may say that I would welcome a succession of legislative acts tending to render divorce more difficult of procurement and, by removing somewhat the facility of remarriage, detracting from its allurements."

Not Free With Advice.

For years the attitude of the Maine court has been that it should not try to tell the legislative body what to do; that making the laws belonged to the legislature, while administrating such of them as came to the courts was the duty of the judicial branch of the government. Upon this theory the court has refrained from making suggestions of laws needed, except in rare instances, other than when asked for such idea by the legislature.

As the superior court of Cumberland county probably handles more divorce cases than any other court in the state, the views of its presiding justice are of particular interest on this subject.

"In considering the subject, it is interesting to note," said Judge Sanborn, "that historically, the institution of divorce seems to be nearly as ancient as the institution of marriage itself. Thus it appears that the Israelitish people recognized the intolerable features incident to a continued state of marriage where a wife, by her conduct, had rendered that state obnoxious."

Judge Sanborn pointed out that the Gospel makes clear that Jesus practically declared that this Mosaic rule was without foundation in good morals, and represented a concession of hardness of hearts.

Relative to the matter of divorce legislation, Judge Sanborn says: "Legislation upon the subject of divorce has busied itself, to a considerable extent, in determining and setting forth the grounds upon which divorces might be decreed, and ten or a dozen different causes have been recognized. On the other hand, since divorce is not a natural right, but a consequence of statutory provision intended for the general welfare, it is competent for a state to refuse to permit divorces at all; and this is, or was recently, the situation in at least one state and, as I am given to understand, in certain Canadian provinces.

Allows Seven Causes.

"In New York and the district of Columbia but one cause for divorce is recognized, while in New Jersey two are recognized. In our own state seven causes are authorized by law. For a time incurable insanity was a ground for divorce, but this was true for only a brief period.

Although Judge Sanborn did not tell it, the story of how incurable insanity became a cause of divorce in Maine, is one of the interesting tales of Maine law-making.

A subordinate officer of the legislature was a married man, but his wife had for some years been confined in the asylum for the insane at Augusta. She was an incurable. This official, eventually, found himself in love with a young woman. His affection was returned. They desired to marry, but the wife in the incurable ward of the hospital for the insane, was an insurmountable barrier. This man, however, was resourceful. He had followed the doing of the legislature for many years. One day, in the closing weeks, there appeared an act, amendatory to a law.

Following a lot of "saids" and "be it enacted" and other folderol, usual to such measures, it said that when the husband or wife was incurably insane, and had been for a specific number of years, it should be a valid cause for divorce in Maine. Those, of course, are not the exact words, but the sense of the law. The time specified was the exact number of years this official's wife had been in the Augusta hospital.

Became a Law.

As the man expected, little attention was given this bill, for the member who introduced it knew nothing of the story behind. It went through, was signed by the governor, became a law, and the official and the young women were married just as quickly as he could secure the divorce.

"It seems to me that any discussion of the pros and cons of divorce must necessarily recognize it as established that the state of society without divorce would be less desirable than it now is," says Judge Sanborn.

"It certainly cannot be gainsaid that, but for some avenue of escape, many upright, virtuous women would, by an unfortunate marriage, be sentenced to a lifetime of torment which might beggar description, with now and then, perhaps, an unfortunate man in like situation. This, I am sure, all will recognize as a possible evil which might well be a subject of legislative correction.

"On the other hand," continued the judge, "divorce easily secured and commonly resorted to, may well be said to be productive of another set of evils so obnoxious in their nature and so destructive of all which makes for good citizenship and human happiness that the matter of safeguards and retrenchment might well form a subject for most careful consideration."

Judge Sanborn presents some figures on divorce pertaining to his own county. Records of Cumberland county show that in 1920 but a single action for divorce was entered in the court. In 1830 there were two, while in 1840 the figures fell back to one, which held through 1850.

U. M. W. District Officials Give Opinions

Sliding Scale Elimination Regarded as Big Thing for the Men—Warm Contest for Some of the Union Offices.

(Canadian Press.)

Halifax, N. S., Nov. 15—There will be no strike of the coal miners of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick over present wage difficulties and negotiations, in the opinion of the district officials of the United Mine Workers of America, according to the Sydney correspondent of the Halifax Herald. J B. MacLachlan, district secretary, said:—"Do not think there will be a strike." Silby Barrett, international board member, positively declares that there will be no strike in this district.

President Baxter's views, says the Herald correspondent, are understood to coincide with those of MacLachlan and Barrett, and he adds that the fact that these influential officials are urging the adoption of the modified contract with the coal company is a fair guarantee that it will be finally ratified.

Both MacLachlan and Barrett admit, however, that there will probably be some stormy debates before it goes through.

With reference to the sliding scale clause in the report of the Royal Commission, Mr. MacLachlan said:—"I consider the elimination of the sliding scale the biggest thing we could have attained. We have not secured the wage increases granted by the commission, but we have cut the sliding scale out of existence and I consider that a greater gain to the men than anything else we might have achieved."

The approach of the annual U. M. W. elections has complicated matters, and the Herald says that some of the union leaders who aspire to office are bidding for support by insinuating that the Montreal agreement was not the best that could be obtained. Secretary MacLachlan has been returned by acclamation, but a hot fight is predicted for the posts held by President Baxter an other officials.
