TRYING TO KILL BLAINE.

Some of the American newspapers are making a deperate efforts to persuade Mr. Blaine that he cannot get well. It certainly looks as if these papers were very much afraid that Mr. Blaine will not die before the Presidential campaign of 1892, and as though they feared he would be the Republican nominee. This is not the first time they have tried to kill Mr. Blaine in advance of a national campaign. In 1888, when he was in the default of the deceased, will please present them duly attested at the residence of James McManus (case, and his average would be probably about 100 per minute.

England's power and wealth stand higher this day, in the opinion of the world than ever before; and we are told that the empire is in need of large doses of medicated nonsense to keep her from falling into an atrophic condition. But these meddlers and muddlers know fully well.

In other words, act by contraries.

In other words, act by anybody being forgotten by somebody.

One of the best stories of Toole's Australian tour has not yet been told on this side of the Equator, not even by the everan humourist himself, at least in public. It so happened that Sir Charles Halle preceded Mr. Toole at a leading gold fields centre in Victoria. Mayors of golden cities are very lavish in their hospitalities, and insist on every distinguished visitor quaffing champagne in the town hall. This restimates the point at which the bank-readvised the cashier to sell. The cashier dos at a profit that recoupled him for all his losses. The price then settled down to its normal figure, and the banker cashier to sell. The cashier down to the pale will be cashier to sell. The cashier down to its normal figure, and out the pale will be eternally punished. In other words, act by contraries.
