The St. John Globe gives the following sketch of the life of Senator Brown: "There will now be published many distributions of Branch Life Government in 1865. In 1867 he sought newspaper sketches of Brown's life.

None of them can do ample justice to In 1873 he was called to the Senate; and the career of such a man. For many in 1874 went to Washington to negociate years it was one of incessant warfare; and he always slept in his armor. He which he worked most vigorously and meant the worked most vigorously and the office and he always slept in his armor. He was ever earnest in his work, and meant to overthrow the wrong which he attacked whilst many who worked with him, had purely personal aims. There has been much said about Mr. Brown's "dictatorship," about his party tyranny and so on. No doubt a great deal of this exists in the imagination of those this exists in the imagination of those which he worked most vigorously and sanguinely. In 1875 he declined the office of Lieutenant Governor of Ontario. Mr. Brown has had no equal in Canada as a leader of thought, as a moulder of public opinion, as an enlightened, independent, and fearless public man. In his lifetime the smoke and heat of political conflicts, oftentimes his own bearing, made his opthis exists in the imagination of those oftentimes his own bearing, made his opwho have continually attacked him. But who have continually attacked him. But anyone who knows anything of the life points look upon him with distorted views. Now, that he is dead, people which Mr. Brown led in Upper Canada, everywhere will remember only his earnest of perseverance, pluck, energy, when combined with his determination to ascombined with his determination to assail wrong doing, made him appear like a dictator, to all who would compromise with evil rather than assail it.

he Catholic Church in Lower Canada off against the other. This idea, peraps, was never expressed in words, yet it had form and shape; and Brown saw it. He saw where the assumptions of the Bishop of Toronto were carrying him, and he assailed this idea with vigor and with unbending will. Many personal friends came to see him once when he had covered the walls of Toronto with hand-bills containing extracts from a sermon in which CHATHAM, - MAY 13, 1880, the idea of subordination to the Church was set forth: "Is this judicious?" said they. "Won't it turn friends against us?" said others; but Brown was no temporizer, and he had little patience with those who were. While other men counts the wound he received on 25th March ed the cost to their personal interest, he last from a pistol shot fired at him in his never gave that a thought. As Mr. Brown office by a former employe named George mise with evil rather than assail it. Some time ago in talking with the writer over his early political life, Mr. Brown was a sociable and pleasant man. It was incidental to such a life as spoke of the difficulties with which he had to contend in the lukewarmness of many who associated with him. There is no doubt whatever that thirty-five years ago there was a determination as fixed in the
