A DICKENS REVIVAL.

English booksellers say there are signs of a revival of interest in Dickens' novels. The demand for them is increasing, and there is also an increasing interest in the personality of the novelist himself, as is shown by enquiries for biographies of him and books containing Dickens-

Although it has been the fashion in literary circles to sneer at Dick ens as superficial, theatrical, and wanting in true art, his popularity with the mass of the English-speaking people has suffered hardly any decline wince his death. While authors who have sprung into fame since his death have enjoyed their brief period of success and then passed quickly into mi-oblivion, new edition after new edition of Dickens' works come from the press, and the demand for them is perennial. There may be a "Dickens revival" in English literary circles, which will be repeated on this side of the ocean; the magazines will have illustrated articles about the man and his books and the originals of his characters and the places hallowed by his genius. But this will be only a passing fad, like the Napoleon fad and the Lincoln fad and the Byron fad. It may stimulate for a time the demand for Dickens' books, but it will soon pass, and that demand will go back to the normal - steady, continuous, not diminishing, but rather increasing gradually, like the demand for Shakespeare or any other classic,

What is the secret of Dickens' per ennial popularity? It is not in his art, for the critics are right when they deny him the laurals of a great and finished artist. We believe the secret is in his deep and broad sympathy with humanity, his hearty hatred for wrongdoing and meanness in every phase, his love of the kindlier virtues, and his wonderfully graphic power in depicting vice and virtue and their effects as embodied and manifested in human character. . This great master of tears and laughter has the power to make us feel with him, to share his indignation at wrong, his pity of the unfortunate, his joy in the beauty of goodness. What if he did lack art? The artificial finesse of a Howells or a James would seem like mincing impertinance in Dickens' work. One does not think of the art of the writer while reading him; one is too much under the wizard's thrall. There is, in short, in the best of Dickens' work those lasting, elemental literary qualities which appeal to mankind at large, not merely to literary cliques, and which will appeal almost as powerfully to the reader a hundred years hence as they did in the writer's own

There is likely to be more than one "Dickens revival," as there have been several "Shakespeare revivals," but the interest in Dickens' books will not depend upon revivals; it will continue, and he will be read, as long as the English language lasts.-Hanilton Herald.

TREES IN BRITAIN.

Much Waste Land on Which Woods Could Be Planted.

The Departmental Committee on British Forestry has issued its report. It remarks on the fact that there are some twenty-one million acres of waste land, a large proportion of which might profitably be afforested. It recommends that two areas for practical demonstration, of not under two and not over ten thousand acres, should be acquired by the State; that lecturers on forestry be appointed in connection with the universities; and that the agricultural colleges make the subject part of their course. The proposal to set apart experimental areas is interesting, and we are rather of opinion that such an experiment Departmental Committee on interesting, and we are rather of opinion that such an experiment interesting, and opinion that such an experiment would not make Alice Holt—one of the areas suggested—much less profitable than it is to-day. Some, indeed we may say all, the other recommendations strike us as pious and quite proper. Unhappily we commendations strike us as pious and quite proper. Unhappily we doubt gravely whether this entirely well-meaning report will result in any considerable planting and replanting operations on the part of the owner of land. The fall in the value of timber and underwood has been great during the last quarter of a century. Oak, for instance, to-day is hardly worth the stripping, though the price of the wood itself has been lower in the past. Larch is one of the few timber trees which the landowner finds he can plant on poor land with something like assured pro-fit. The clause in the report referfit. The clause in the report recerring to the estate duties may remind us of the undoubted fact that Sir William Harcourt's Finance Act must be held responsible for the fall of a great deal of timber in English woods which is not likely to be replaced in the near future. Too often it must be the only way to pay of the duties .- Saturday Review.

Using Powder.

Many persons aver that powder is ruinous to the complexion. You will occasionally meet old ladies with skins of baby textures who will tell you that they have used powder all their lives. But their powder was the simplest preparation, just a little magnesia and zinc, perfumed with orris root. If the skin needs extra care, a quarter of a lemon squeezed in a little milk will be found very beneficial. The face should be bathed in it morning and evening. If possible, the face should never be washed in water. Soap should only be used at night. It is a good plan after washing the face with soap to use the curd of lemon and milk, letting it dry on the

A Low, Studded Effect. A low, studded effect is the desired ap pearance for a room these days. The arrangement of the furniture and draperies has much to do with the apparent height of a room. Low bookcases lining the walls, pictures placed on a line with the eye and draperies ar ranged with a regard to horizontal rather than perpendicular lines—these all tend to give a low, studded effect.

Kerosene applied with a flannel cloth is most efficacious in removing discolorations in metal or porcelain tubs. These are often occasioned by the mineral properties contained in the water, but more often by the lack of daily care. In either event a brisk applica tion of kerosene will effectually remove all traces of them.

A Bed Linen Finish. Here is a good finish for fine sheets and pillowcases. There is the wide stitched hem and inside this a rather deep band of small squares formed by cross lines of drawn work and in each square a round dot of embroidery. The drawnwork is simple, but little more than hemstitching.

A CHILD'S LIFE FOOD

Physicians speak of fat food as "life food" and say that all children ought to have it in abundance. They say too, that weak, thin, nervous children must have fat food and recommend Scott's Emulsion.

It promptly returns sickly, delicate children to rosy health. /It is the life of flesh-creating food and keeps the scale of child-health evenly balanced.

Being prepared for easy digestion Scott's Emulsion is readily accepted by the stomach and quickly passed into the blood. There commences at once the repairing of wasted tissues, the enrichment of the blood and the strengthening of the whole system.

Any child who needs more and better nourishment than it seems to be getting from its ordinary food will be greatly benefited if given Scott's Emulsion:

ELI, THE BEGGAR.

Seme Newspaper Moralizing That Is Worlb Some Consideration.

The old Jew who died worth $100, 000, although he lived as if he wer not worth a cent, merely carried the money-hunting spirit of the times to money-hunting spirit of the times to the extreme limit.

Allowing for certain differences in station and surrounding circumstances, there are plenty of Eli Hymans to be met with whichever way one turns. They do not dress as the old Jew did, for they operate on a higher level than he; they do not sleep in stables for they were reared better than he; and they are compelled by over-ruling laws that they better than he; and they are compelled by over-ruling laws that they cannot make way against, to maintain more or sless expensive homes, and to live rather well as regards creature comforts.

But, like Eli the Jew, they live only for money. It is the one great thought of their lives, and if it is not their only thought, it enters into all others and discolors them. The difference between this beggarly miser and some men of wealth, who heard of him with much surprise and a little aversion, is not as great as heard of him with much surprise and a little aversion, is not as great as they think. Like him, they have saved and schemed for money long after their earthly needs were met. Wealth that he concealed in the lining of his vest they have stowed away in de-posit vaults. He, being rich, begged pennies from the poor. They, being rich, and having grown strong and long-armed, reach out and seize wealth they do not need from under the groping hands of those who need it badly. He denied himself the small pleasures that men of his class are usually inclined to, heat, light, a are usually inclined to, heat, light, a bed, regular nourishment, but he joyed to do it, for the gain he got. They, with their greater intelligence and possibilities, deny themselves also. He lived for money; they live for money. He hid his wealth inside the lining of his clothes; they hide theirs elsewhere, and think that makes a difference.

There should be erected on the lawn before the City Hall a life-size statue of Eli, the Beggar, who represents the extreme to which the age is tending. It would be a timely semon in stone. It would arrest the attention of ten thousand men who, like him, are grasping after wealth and mere wealth, and, figuratively speaking, sewing it into their vests, where it may—like his—be found by chance when strangers strip their disrespected forms. And many of those vests will—as nearly happened to his—be thrown on the fire and consumed, wealth and all, and so on the wiser. This statue would cut quite a figure. Meny would pause to consider its meaning—Toronto Star.

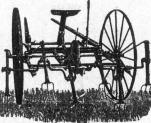

Indians and the Graphaphone A rather amusing experience in con-nection with Dominion Superinten-dent of Forestry Stewart's recent tour in the fer north was a half-breed concert in one of the Indian breed concert in one of the Indian settlements around the Lesser Great Slave Lake. The Indians there are rather up-to-date, know the topical songs of the day, and can sing. On this particular occasion Mr. Stewart was entertained with "Go-goo Fyes" and similar melodies, and when he asked a half-breed where he had learned the tunes he received the terse reply, "Graphaphone."
