

Environment week draws attention to pollution

This second week in October, October 5-11, is observed across Canada as Canadian Environment Week.

Canadian Environment Week was established by a private member's bill that was passed and assented to in March 1971. That time probably marked the height of public concern over pollution problems, and the beginning of a period now underway in which there is a continuing effort to bring pollution problems under control and to take broader environmental matters into account at all times, said a news release from the Conservation Council of New Brunswick.

Since 1971 much has been done federally and provincially through legislation and regulation to clean up our environment. Much remains to be done, the release states.

It is the purpose of Canadian Environment Week to bring to public attention the importance of the environment. Man depends on fresh air, clean water and green plants for his survival. Without a healthy environment nothing else on this planet will last long, says the Conservation Council.

"During Canadian Environment Week we should all take a new look at the world around us, see what has been achieved and see what problems remain to be solved," they say, and "We should consider again the responsibility we all have to treat the environment with respect. Canadian Environment Week is a time to renew our determination to give ourselves the best environment money can buy."

Native Student Union forms

BRANDON (CUP) - A Native Student's Union (NSU) has emerged on the University of Brandon campus.

Native student number about 200, or 10 percent of the student population at Brandon.

According to a spokesperson for the union, the native students want to play a more significant role in the life of the University community.

Dr. P. Voorhis, of the Native Studies Department stressed recently that these students have very special needs, rights and interests. He views the Native Studies Department as a "symbiotic relationship with the students," noting that mutual benefit arises out of this relationship.

The native students have not felt a part of the Brandon University Students Union, he said, which has led to a lack of confidence in the student council.

In answer to a questionnaire circulated among native students they clearly noted that the NSU should participate fully on campus providing activities of cultural educational and social interests.

They said the NSU should supplement the existing student's union rather than compete with it.

Compensations paid

OTTAWA (CUP) - According to recently released reports by Statistics Canada, the average compensation paid to University and College educators was $19,442 for 1974.

The results of the first survey of employer labour costs in education for 1974 show total compensation for the teaching and academic category amounted to $13,450 for each regular full-time employee.

For elementary and secondary schools the average was $12,575. In the non-teaching category, total compensation averaged $7,804 for all education, $7,542 for elementary and secondary schools and $7,934 for universities and colleges.

Total compensation comprises salaries or wages and those items commonly referred to as fringe benefits.
