DESERTED VILLAGES.

English Writer in London Express Gives Remedy for Overcrowding blum and Empty Cottages.

Our villages are in a bad way. The evils set out in your recent article, "The Truth About Country Life," are no exaggeration. And of all the causes that have brought about this sad state is the most potent, the modern civilization penetrates even the remotest hamlets of the kingdom.

The laborer does not, because he cannot, live to-day in blissful ignorance of the great world's bustle and affairs. The schoolmaster has done much, the newspaper has done more, the traveling circus and the village library have assisted, and a vague unrest in the bucolic mind is the result.

Because his betters travel now as never before, and he hears their speech, watches their manners, and marks their dress, the desire for imitation arouses fitful stirrings in his breast, and appears in weird extravagance of costume and habit. He does not, as his father and grandfather did, put his mind into his plowing and sowing, and his tending of the sheep; nor does the placid animalism of the alehouse fill the ambition of his leisure hours. The club feast loses its charm, and the weekly market ceases to satisfy. The big city beckons not in vain, and one day he gets upon the carrier's cart and is gone.

This band of advancing education has begun to play, and Hodge is facing the music. He feels it has a message for him, and, though he cannot interpret it, he follows, with open mouth and ears, and when the strains are silent he finds himself in the thick of the fray.

A Vague Ambition.

The man is seeking something he cannot find in the village. What is it? A living wage? Say rather a pittance and a portion of land that helped it out, the cultivation of which was but an irksome addition to the long day of dreary toil. He had no recourse.

But he had a home? True, of a sort; and picturesque to the sight, indeed, but not seldom an offense to the smell. At the school there penetrated his slow-moving mind certain facts about the strange machine called the human body, its claims and scents and conditions of things that his fathers had ignored for generations, till even his stolid conservatism was aroused, and he gathered up his bundle and quitted.

Into the question of wages one need not go; what the farmer can, and what he should, pay are considerations beside the point. What he does pay he knows, so does Hodge, and he says it is not enough, considering what he has to endure and what certain earlier emigrants who have chanced on good fortune in the cities, tell him of their circumstances.

So he elects to take his chances in the towns, though the only occupation nature, environment, and experience have fitted him for is agricultural labor.

Model villages are a suggested remedy. And such are to be found in England here and there. But do they meet the case? I think not. It is the bustle and attraction of town life that the laborer wants.

The New Scheme.

In the interests alike of British agriculture and our great overcrowded centres of industry, a remedy is demanded which will combine the economic advantages and social attractions of town life with the refining and health-giving influences of the country. Such a plan has been set forth with great insight and good sense by Mr. Ebenezer Howard in his book, "Garden Cities of Tomorrow." It was this volume which led to the formation of the Garden City Association a few years ago.

This association seeks to educate public opinion in these matters by drawing attention to the evils of the deserted village, the overcrowded city, and the manifold disadvantages of each, and the eminently practical character of the remedy proposed by Mr. Howard. It has been successful in winning the support of people eminent in many varied spheres of influence, who find a bond of union in their realization of existent evils and their belief in the remedy proposed.

Briefly put, the plan in this: That a company, adequately financed, should purchase an ample estate near a great manufacturing centre and a main line of railway, and there begin the establishment of a new city. Let it should be regarded as merely a speculative venture. I hasten to point out that the company's expenses will be fixed at a relatively low rate, and their dividend limited to 4 to 5 per cent. per annum.

Great advantages will follow from the land being thus held. What no municipality has power to attempt, a body of private individuals may accomplish. Manufacturers will be invited to do systematically and in numbers what isolated firms have found it to their advantage of late to adventure—i. e., to move their factories to the country or to establish a branch there. The workers in these factories will probably form the bulk of the Garden City community.

Where Hodge Benefits.

But the point I would at present make is this—that Hodge will not be forgotten. About five-sixths of the estate of, say, six or eight thousand acres, will be given up to agriculture in the form of small allotments or larger farms, and the proprietor will have a market for his produce at his door. Should he find it to his advantage to send away his produce, a convenient local line will give him ready access to the main railway system.

The great increase in value that will follow the conversion of agricultural land into a town site will belong to the community. They will have the power, after a certain specified time, of buying out the company and electing their municipal officers in the usual way.

Leases will be granted on terms far more favorable than an individual landowner would allow, and ample protection for all improvements placed upon the land will be afforded to every tenant. By a rigid agreement the residential portion of the estate will be guarded from all possibility of overcrowding, and all buildings will be erected after the most approved methods of sanitary and artistic construction.

The advantages of this scheme are immediate and enormous. The artisan will live in sight of the country and within easy distance of its charms. The agricultural laborer will enjoy the manifold advantages of electricity and the attractions of the life and bustle of a fair-sized city. Public buildings, places of amusement, and schools of adequate design and ample proportions will be erected by the income derived from the natural increase in the land's value.

Hill will have his chance, and Hodge his heart's desire; each will arrive with the first Garden City in the near future, and the success of the first means that others will follow.—George J. H. Northcroft, Organizing Secretary Garden City Association, in London Express.

Steamers Won't Stop.

Experiments show that a large ocean steamer going at nineteen knots an hour will move over a distance of two miles after its engines are stopped and reversed, and no authority gives less than a mile or a mile and a half as the required space to stop its progress.

Rot in Trees.

In many cases rot in trees may be stopped by carefully removing all the decayed wood and covering the wounds with liquid shellac or common white lead paint, being careful not to paint the bark.

Rubinstein and the Pabst.

Rubinstein was professor of the piano to Carmen Sylva at one time, and it was to one of her ladies that he said: "When I first went to England and was young and could play, I used to perform to empty halls; now that I am old and cannot play they all go over me and can't find a hall big enough for me to perform in."

Bananas Versus Beefsteak.

"Weight for weight" it is claimed that bananas beat beefsteak, and, moreover, "there are cases on record where children's lives have been saved by keeping them on a diet of bananas."

The first artificer ever ennobled for his work was Henry de Vie, a converted Arab, who built a gigantic clock for Charles V., king of France, in 1570. The clock weighed 500 pounds. De Vie also received a life pension.

Oyster Measures.

An official of the state administration of Maryland is the commander of the state fishery board. The duty of the oyster measurer is to prevent the marketing of very small oysters.

Cicada Concerts.

A Natal naturalist asserts, from observation, that other insects are attracted to hear the cicada sing, just as humans gather about a concert performer.

A Rat Story.

A Belgian gardener had planted 250 tulip bulbs, but the following day they had mysteriously disappeared. Rats were suspected, and an investigation resulted in the finding of their hole and subterranean chamber, where the bulbs were hidden, packed neatly in rows, one above the other.

Leather.

The life of modern leather made by the use of sulphuric acid is but fifteen years. This makes it necessary for the British museum to spend $20,000 a year in renewing leather book bindings.

Cleaning a Pipe.

An effective way of cleaning a clay or meerschaum pipe is to place in a pot of cold sweet milk and bring gradually to a boil.

Stained Engravings.

To remove stains on engravings, hang the engraving in a barrel in the bottom of which is a jar containing a lump of phosphorus partly covered with water. Cover the barrel and let the engraving remain until the stain fades.

In German noble families, unlike the English nobility, the father's title is inherited by each of his children, resulting in an endless posterity of counts, countesses, barons and baronesses.

Schoolboy Slang.

The colloquial style of the boy seems to be founded on four main principles—a desire to be thought funny, a belief in the virtue of slang, a strong taste for hyperbole and a disregard of all elegance of expression. The observance of these principles may be illustrated by the following examples: "Master—Why are you late this morning? Boy—Please, sir, I smashed my braces while I was sticking my breeches on." Similarly "Jug out" is always preferred to "remove." The following, we must hope for the credit of surgical science, was a misrepresentation of what took place on the painful occasion: "Master—Why did M. come back two days late this term? Boy—He had to stop at home to have his tonsils lugged out."—London Spectator.

IT READS LIKE A MIRACLE

Only Dodd's Kidney Pills are Doing Similar Things Daily

Reuben Draper's Gravel was Cured Three Years Ago—It Has Never Come Back.

Bristol, P. Q., Quebec, July 27.—(Special).—Reuben Draper, well-known here, tells a story of his cure of a bad case of gravel that would be considered miraculous if similar cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills were not being reported almost daily.

"About three years ago," says Mr. Draper, "I was taken ill with what I thought was gravel. I was suffering great pain, and the doctor I sent for gave me but little relief. Another doctor I tried failed to cure me, and I was getting weaker all the time."

"Then a man advised me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills as they had cured his mother, and I did so. In just one week after I started using them, I passed a stone as large as a small bean, and in four days after I passed another about the size of a grain of barley. That is two years ago, and I have not had any trouble since."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure all ailments of the bladder and urinary organs.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir J. B. Edwards.

Lieutenant-General Sir James Bevan Edwards, who has been appointed Colonel in command of the Royal Engineers, in succession to the late Field-Marshal Sir John Lintorn Simmons, joined the corps from the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich in 1852, and served in the closing scenes of the Crimean War. He accompanied Sir Hugh Rose in his long and arduous campaign in Central India in 1857, which ended with the capture of Tantia Topse. He was repeatedly mentioned in despatches, particularly for his gallantry at the storming of Jhansi, where he led the only two successful columns of assault. He commanded the Royal Engineers during the Sudan campaign of 1885, and was again highly praised in despatches for his services before Hashen and at the destruction of Tamai.

A MOTHER'S TESTIMONY.

"LACTATED FOOD Saved My Baby's Life."

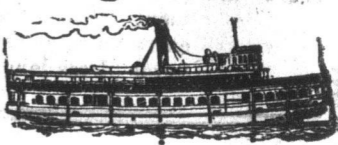

A mother's statement as to how her baby's life was saved, may induce many mothers to ask themselves the question, "Am I using the right food for my baby?"

A lady, the wife of a Montreal merchant, writes as follows: "My baby was never breast-fed; it had to be brought up on prepared foods. When the little one was two months old, it was so thin and weak that doctor said it would not live many days. Reading about Lactated Food, I bought a package and tried it. There was new life for the baby in the first meal. After using Lactated Food for ten days, I found that baby was brighter and stronger. I continued with the food, and my baby now five months old, is fat and healthy. Your Lactated Food saved my dear baby's life; it is worth its weight in gold."

The person that groans a good deal about the sins of others will bear watching.
