"She was sent up, then?"

"Yes, but I gave her the lightest sentence possible. Her old father was there, quite broken down with grief, and he, of course, gave her the best of characters; and certainly she was an honest-looking girl. Those are the things that make one regret his responsibility as judge. If I had obeyed my instinct I should have let her go. But a judge can't obey his instinct; he must go by the evidence. Shall we take our coffee in the smoking-room?" "She was sent up, then ?"

The next morning at ten o'clock I was in Fulton Merket. I found Mr. Davis. It was as I had surmited. Nora was the girl of whom the judge had been telling me. Mr. Davis expressed sincere regret at the affair, but he would not admit Nora's innocence. "It lavs between her and Dan," he remarked. "One or other of 'om must have done it. Frank, he was sure it was Dan. But I know Dan better than Frank does. He was a steady man; he was getting good wages know Dan better than Frank does. He was a steady man; he was getting good wages and he was looking forward to this voyage he'd gone on to better himself still more. Nora, she had more temptation and more chances, and besides, she confessed it. No; air, I guess 'twas ber. I'm afraid she wasn't as good as she looked, and I expect she was making up to Frank into the hargain."

"How is her father ?" I inquired. "I hear the old man took pretty bad," said Davis, shaking his head. "He was sick and had to throw up his position. I wanted to do something for him, but he wouldn't take it. It's a bad job, and Frank ain't been like himself since either."

Frank sin't been like himself since either."

While we were yet speaking together a messenger came up with a letter for Mr. Davis. He opened and read it and grew very pale. He handed it to me in silence. It was from the hospital, and stated briefly that Frank Wilson had been brought there early that morning, suffering from fatal ir juries, and had expressed a desire to see his uncle, Mr. Davis.

I went with Mr. Davis to the hospital. This part of the story may be cut short.

I went with Mr. Davis to the hospital. This part of the story may be cut short. Wilson was dying. He had been at a gambling den the night before. The police had raided the place. In attempting to escape he had fallen head long down a flight of steps. He was in great pain, but conscious, and aware that he had but a few hours to live. But before the end came be had something to say, and that was that he himself had committed the theft for which Nora had suffered. He had done it with the intention of fixing the blame on Dan and thus committed the theft for which Nora had auffered. He had done it with the inten-tion of fixing the blame on Dan and thus

This is all there is to the story. After old man O'Brien's death Dan and Nora were married. Mr. Davis, perhaps as a vicarious atonement for his nephew's evil deeds, took Dan into partnership, and I have met with.

GEORGE HAY, JOHN GEDDES, ALEXANDER MACDONALD, AND THEIR TIME. On occasion of the temporary cessation of his negotiations, Bishop Hay held three ordinations in the church of the Scotch College, On December 16th, being the third Sunday in Advent, he conferred sub-deaconship on three of the students, Reginald McEachan, Alexander McDonald and Donald Stuart. He spoke of these young men as being "very promising." On St. Thomas' day, Dec. 21st, he ordained them Deacons; and on St. Stephen's day, Dec. 26th, raised them to the Priesthood.

was assailed as soon as it became known, with petitions and remonstrances against the proposed appointment. The Eng lish and Irish colleges, especially, made more determined opposition than ever. The Cardinal, under so much pressure, lost courage, and not only gave up all idea of the appointment, but also refused even to admit Mr. Thomson into the college. The anonymous letter had just come in time to furnish him with a pretext for receding from his promise on St. Stephen's day, Dec. 26th, raised them to the Priesthood.

Before leaving Rome, which was not till the third week after Easter, the bishop sat for his portrait, which continues to be an ornament of the restor's room in the Scotch College. The three saccompanied him on his journey home accompanied him on his journey home wards, as far as Paris. They left him there and pursued their journey by Douai, Ostend and Newcastle. The bishop remained a few days longer for the purpose, although not with much belonging to the College of Douai which were still detained, and were likely to be so for an indefinite length of time. His labour was of no avail, notwithstand wire the still detained, and were likely to be so for an indefinite length of the bishop of Rhodes. On reaching England, the Bishop's luggage, consusting, among other things, of breviaries and other books, relies, beads and models which he had brought with him from Rome, were seized as contraband. This wrongful seizure caused some annoying officials and detained him a few days officials students. This was hard on Albani. He must retaliate; and the reprisals he adopted, it will be owned, were far from being justifiable. He suspended payment of the income arising from the legacy of the Chevalier St. George to the Scotch seminaraies. Tantone animus calestibus Ire! merited censure for doing your duty. You resemble the more other great and holy prelates who have been treated in thesame manner, and I hope you will persevere with the same firmness."

Mr. Thomson enjoyed the satisfaction of carrying with him to Rome the affection ate and grateful remembrance of the congregation at Edinburgh which he had so long and so well served.

Some of the senior priests, meanwhile, who had so strongly protested against the bishop's appointment at home, had recourse to a very questionable way of making their protest known at Rome. An anonymous letter, full of extravagant abuse of Bishop Hay and Mr. Thomson, was concocted by Dr. Alex ander Geddes; and this letter they concurred in forwarding to the holy city. It arrived opportunely for Cardinal Albani, who, on account of the arrange ment he had come to with Bishop Hay, was assailed as soon as it became known, with petitions and remonstrances against the proposed appointment. The Eng the bishops and who, at once, transferred it to them by a formal deed. In making the aiterations referred to, the appearance of a dwelling house, with chimneys, was retained. A room about fifty feet long and twenty five broad occupied the whole length and breadth of the new floor. This room was the chapel. The public had access to it by the common turret stair which connected the stories of the house with one another. A small wooden stair inside the dwelling house, in the floor below the chapel, formed a private approach for the clergy.

The onerous duties of a parish priest fell to the share of Bishop Hay during the early months of this year, his assistant, the Rev. Paul McPherson, being in delicate health. He found time, however, for his favorite theological studies, and he made good use of it in preparing the he made good use of it in preparing the work which was, at first, called the second work which was, at first, called the second part of "The Sincere Christian," and afterwards, "The Devout Christian." A room, lighted by a skylicht, in the presoytery of Aberdeen, is shown as the place where he studied and wrote, when resident at the City of the North. The angel of the schools, Ssint Thomas Aquinas, was the theologian on whom he most relied. His correspondence, meanwhile, was not neglected; and it required to be actively conducted, as the subjects were the Scotch College at Rome; and the Neapolitan Abbacies, together with discussions by letter, on money matters and the business of the mission, with his coadjutor and others. He wrote at this and the business of the mission, with his coasijutor and others. He wrote at this time, about some recreative excursions which he enjoyed, and by which his health was benefited. He spoke in a pleasant style, of going on a visit to "Patmos" (Scalan); and mingling pleasure with business, Miscuit sovia ludo, he journeyed to Fetternear, in order to baptize a daughter of Mr. Leslie, the Laird of that place. Once arrived there, he found that pleasure must give way to duty, a whole winter's work awaiting him—the instruction and preparation for duty, a whole winter's work awaiting him—the instruction and preparation for confirmation of several recent converts in that locality which was destined to become famous in the annals of the Church. Such duty was pleasure in comparison with the more arduous duties which the severity of the season laid upon him. There was much suffering, and the scarcity pressed heavily on the poorer class of people. The Bishop was applied to from all quarters. Town and country alike had recourse to him. His charity was equal to the pressure, and he was able to meet its many demands by making available funds that would otherwise have remained undisturbed. The
