ENGLISH CLASSICS AT THE C. C. I

In order to foster a love for the est reading, to improve the literary style and taste of the pupils, and to encourage them to read some of the masterpieces of English literature during their school career, the following scheme has been outlined,

Copies of some of the best poetry and prose in the language have been ordered and are for sale at the bookstores. A handsome 25 cent uniform edition has been selected, and forty of each set have been procured, that is, a copy for each pupil in a Form. One book is to be finished every month. At the end of each month the Forms will, in order to save expense, exchange books.

As much as possible will be read in the literature classes, the rest must be read in study hours, or at

At the end of every two months an examination will be held to determine whether or not the pupils have read the books intelligently and appreciatively. The subject matter of the books will also form material for essay work during the term. The following are the books to be read in October: Form 1A-Longfellow's Evangeline Form 1B-Longfellow's Courtrship Standish. Form 2A - Washington Irving's

Sketch Book. Form 2B-Scott's Lady of the Form 3A-Milton's Paradise Lost-Books 1 and 2.

It has been discovered that th great city of London rests on a foundation of skeletons-hundreds of thousands of skeletons that extend east and west, north and south, from boundary to boundary of the world's metropolis, and beyond. There they lie, compressed into a compact mass by the superimposed clay, gravel, sand, and surface structures. These skeletons were once the framework of living beings-beings that were the most simple multicelanimals known as sponges lular Many thousands of years ago, the great sea ebbed and flowed where London now stands, these metazoon organisms, these cities of cells, these enices, with their thousands of canals, lived and did their unconscious part in the great plan of evolution. Now the life has gone, the cells are crushed, the canals are closed, and only the frames of flint, cominto a homogeneous mass, pressed

"Talk About Fog."

During my residence for several years in New Brunswick we had frequently fogs so heavy that during some of our cricket matches we had to cease play, not being able to see from one wicket to the other, and on one occasion, when leaving and crossing Sidney street, in St. John, some parties shingling a house had actually shingled some three feet, by actual measurement, into the fog. A fact, I assure you.-North Toronto, in Toronto Star.
