Love Finds the Way

"Good night, my fine fellow," said the gentleman; good humoredly, adding to the obsequious footman as the carriage now started: "Going home drunk and happy."

But the yokel did not behave much like a drunken man—or, perhaps, it might be considered that he did; for directly he got into the darkness he turned out of the sidewalk and ran along by the hedge in the direction which the brougham had taken, and by cutting across a field he reached the inn in time to see—while he himself was hidden from view by a deep shadow behind the porch—the gentleman from the hall alight and enter the inn.

So after the yokel entered the bar himself and in true country fashion got into conversation with the little group of laborers there, and learned that the strange gentleman was also a liberal one; that he had stood two bottles of wine, and that he had two private rooms set apart for his use—to wit, the best parlor and the best bedroom.

Having in a casual way ascertained the position of these two rooms, the yokel, who was a stranger to these parts himself, paid his reckoning and tramped out. In the morning my lord, his highness, the prince, or whatever else he was, paid his bill, gave the good woman of the house a sovereign into the bargain and asked for the best horse.

He was going to London, he said, but should return after a stay of a few hours only. A good horse was obtained for him—not the best in the village, however, for that seemed to have been engaged by a bagman, who was going up to town, also.

The prince, marquis or whatever else he might be, started at 8 o'clock, and set off at a good pace Londonward. At a quarter past 8 the bagman, a young fellow with an abundant crop of red hair and mutton-chop whiskers, with the additional advantage of a green shade over one eye, started also, likewise on the London road.
