Saturday, April 15, 1854.

We have policed a series of articles in the Exominer busded "Trux Naw Caritart," in which there has been an attempt on the part of the editor to get up a sort of tobleaux visuate.—of course, in the caricature style.—of the members of the new Executive Council, and we should have passed them over with the contempt that they deserve—for we have long since known the fittle credit that is to be attached to the assertions of the proprietor and editor of the Examiner—were it not that it has been our good fortune to full its with a picture, by the same hand, of the second of those who are thus honored, under the title of "The Leader,"—not "the counterfeit presentment of two brothers," but of the same identical person, not much above six years since, and it is amusing to observe what a difference there is between the two lifenesses, drawn and painted by the same hand, and after the life. Ledicrous and provecative of laughter as the thing is, it is nevertheless attended with a degree of disguit and abhorrence amounting to leasthing, at witnessing the utter want of principle and disregard of the common desencies and amenities of life displayed by the author of these articles. We have a great deal of the versatility and vensities of lawyers, of their saying one thing at one time, and training round and asserting the very reverse at another, as they are retained; but in these cases the lawyer is neither deceived himself nor does he deceive others. He openly states, that he is of counsel for plaintiff or defendant, and that he is instructed to put his effort, as they pass before him, still he is bound to keeps to the rule laid down by Cicero, "not to dave to say anything that is true." We feat, however, that the Honorable Editor of the Examiner has either never heard of Cicero's definition of the duty of an historian, or conceives it to be a most heathenish doctrine; for generally apsaking, his practice is the very reverse,—for his defined any overything that is never heard of Cicero's definition of the duty of an historian, or conceives it to be a most heathenish doctrine; for, generally speaking, his practice is the very reverse;—for he dares to any everything that is false, and is extremely reluctant to any anything that is true, if it in the least makes for his opponent. There is another anying, fully as old as the times of the Roman orator, and so well esteemed as to become an English proverb, intimating that those who deal in fiction should have good-memories. It is extremely awhward to have one's own previous dayings and writings on former occasions quoted in contradiction to those made at a more recent period; but it is a writings on former occasions quoted in contradiction to those made at a more recent period; but it is a circumstance that often occurs in the career of then of the character of the editor of the Examiner. In 1847, when the Hon. Mr. Holl was appointed to a contradict of Examiner. seat in the Executive Council, the app thus characterised in that journal:-

"The Honorable John Myrie Holl was, on Tues-day last, sworn in a Member of the Executive Coun-ell, in the room of the Honorable John Brecken, deceased.

"Bfr Holl is likewise a member of the Legislative Council, and has often distinguished himself in that Body, by his active and well educated mind, and by his liberal and statement-like principles. His standing and respectability are sufficiently well known to preclude the necessity of remark on our part, or cavil on that of our opponents."

It was the interest, at that time, of those with whom Mr. Whelan was connected, to endeavor to attach Mr. Holl to their party, and to secure the aid of his talents and influence in the Legislative Council; and the editor for once felt the necessity of adhering to the truth. He could not have drawn a more correct portrait of the hon, gentleman; and it is with much pleasure we rescue it from the oblivion into which it was fast descending, and present it to our readers as equally applicable to the same gentleman on his responsi-ment to the Executive Council in 1854. How the ment to the Executive Council in 1854. How the writer of the above paragraph could, only a few days eines, make the following statement concerning the same person, will elicit some surprise in those who are not acquainted with the lengths to which party spirit, unrestrained by principle, will carry their pos-

Mr. Holi has been many years in the Legislative Council—having been placed there shortly after his arrival from England, not because he is a man pesseised of brilliant abilities or extensive inflaence in the country, but because, we believe, he was known to entertain at the time of his appointment opinous favourable to the party than dominant and to the proprietary class—acrely/menneed at that time by the Escheators,—and to be well disposed to promote the Excheaters,—and to be well disposed to promote the interests of the proprietors was an infallible gaurantee that he would not turn his back upon the designs of the family compact who held the reins of office. Of Mr. Hell's antecedents before his arrival in the Colony, we have no authentic information. We are informed, however, that his credentials of character to Sir Charles Fittroy—the Lieut. Governor of the Colony at the time of his artival—were drawn up by a Metropolitan Tailor of some reputs, and that the honorable gentleman's family, or some of them at least, were in one way or other, at no distant period, consected with the honorable and ancient trade of habit making. A little wealth, however—whether acquired in this or any other way is of no consequence now—enabled Mr. Hell to seame all the airs, all the pride and pomposity of a little Colonial aristocrat, who worships nothing so devocity as a balance at his banker's."

We will leave our readers a little time to compare the two, and to reflect on the credit due to the asser-tions of a person capable of acting thus. We have not done with Mr. Whelan yet, nor with the rescued Engages; of 1847, but reserve them for a future number.

The show of Meet in the Market of to-day, is beyond all comparison, the finest we have ever witnessed. Want of time, prevents our doing justice to the subject—to all an interesting one—and for this reason we shall postpone it to our next issue.

The Rev. Mr. Sutherland will preach in the Temperature Hall on Sabbath first, April 16th, at 11 o'clock, at 8, and helf-past sir, in the evening.

THE REPORTER has furnished us with a commany of the proceedings in the Assembly, pp. to Thursday hight, which we are unable to publish in this hase.

Str.—Allow me to state, in answer to the Hon.
Mr. Heasily's charge of making an annexyment and personal attack on him in the remark made by me on his speech on Savings Banks, that nothing was further from my wishoe or instantion, than to attack any one.
My lettee in your paper of the 5th April, was written in defence of the institution of Savings Banks, and if I made observations in disparagement of his speech, they were made accessarily, coasequent of his speech, they were not meant as a personal at tack on him, which I could have no possible motive in making, and which I utterly disclaim.

I shall offer only one observation on his explanation—Had the hea, gestleman applied a little of that modesty to himself which he so gracefully havishes or me, and given, as quotations from Lawson, that part of his speech which is reported as delivered of his own knowledge, he would have enabled me at once to apply to his author those remarks which he in pleased to constrose as personal to himself, for he could hardly have suspected me to detect the plagarism.

To p-event me being charged with another unnonymous attack on my hon. friend, if he will still allow me to call him so, I subscribe myself
