Having thrown his vest on the ground, and rolled up his sleeves, Mr. Kepper commenced chopping off the log, about eight feet from the butt.

It was a 'hard job,' Samson afterwards said-and as the sun came pouring down upon him, he was quite exhausted, and heated. Leaving the main portion of the tr unk hanging by a 'chip' to the stem, in order that blocks might be placed under it to keep it from falling quite to the ground. amson struck his axe into the log, and began to look for a shady place to sit down. Near by grew a stately basswood, from the roots of which sprung up a luxuriant growth of shoots, surgounding the parent tree. Reflecting that these would not only shade him from the sun, but also serve as a protection against the swarm of flies, he determined to find a resting-place among them, and began accordingly to push them aside, in search of the most comfortable spot. At that moment a chirping of a squirrel. attracted his attention to the vast mass of of earth, which adhered to the upturned roots of a fallen tree. The little animal was sitting on the summit of this mass, talking saucily to Mr. Kepper, who thinking of
