Facts About Motherhood

The experience of Motherhood is a trying one to most women and marks away in music and conversation. I distinctly an epoch in their lives. Not felt happier than I had done for many one woman in a hun- a day. The rest I had long been seek-

Of course nearly every woman now, adays has medical licious joy stole over me, I felt as treatment at the time of child-birth, but many approach the experience with an organism unfitted for the trial of strength, and when the strain is over was one of unalloyed delight to me.

her system has received a shock from there were long strolls on the sea-which it is hard to recover. Follow-shore, and longer rambles through shore, and longer rambles through ing right upon this comes the nervous strain of caring for the child, and a distinct change in the mother results.

There is nothing mere charming than a happy and healthy mother of children, and indeed child-birth under right conditions need be no hazard to health would not, could not believe it was conditions need be no hazard to health or beauty. The unexplainable thing is the old, old story over again, that, with all the evidence of shattered nerves and broken health resulting I awoke from my dream at las the old, old story over again, that I I awoke from my dream at last. What meant the sudden light that leaped into the eyes of Ray De Lacy? I had seen many different expressions in those blue eyes, but never one like that. His face had never wore that look for me. He caught both her tiny white hands in his, and "Ray!" and "Effie!" burst simultaneously from their lips.

I looked at her and started. She stood before me, the living original of the picture I had once seen in his studio, the same fair, child-like face, with its smling lips and sunny hazel hair and eyes. A sharp, keen pang of jealousy shot through my heart, and nearly drove me wild. They were gazing in each other's dark eyes, and heeded me not. Then I knew how passionately, how vainly I had loved him. I. the heiress and belle, at whose feet the handsomest, the noblest in the land had knelt, only to be rejected. Despised, and for her-for this bright-haired doll-this tiny. childish prattler, with her sunny eyes and silvery voice. Oh! the scorn and self-contempt that filled my mind at that moment. How I hated and de spised myself for having fallen sc low. I could not stand there and watch the man I loved looking with almost passionate adoration into the prety face of this girl, whom I despised too intensely to call my rival. So still unnoticed, I turned away, sought the house and my own room.

There was no need for me to wear "mask of smiles." I could be as cold and proud, and reserved as I oleased, and only seem the more naural. Therefore, when I descended he stairs, and saw them sitting side y side, on the sofa, no one would ave dreamed that under the calm, alnost haughty exterior with which greeted them, that one at least was over my shoulders by the wind, and dearer to me than all else on earth.
