Replies to Shimri. Cable News.

Editor Evening Telegram.

Sir—It appears that my reply to "Shimri" in your issue of the 17th inst., has disturbed the equilibrium of that gentleman judging from the fact that he has "brought down the wrath of the High Church party (whatever that may mean) upon his devoted head. Let me assure him, however, that the Catholics of the Church of England in this Colony are not in the least worried about him, as this is a purely individual effort and pledges no party either high or low to the views I have given expression. He professes amusement at my hatred of the word "Protestant" a term he assures us has been applied to Church people of this Colony for the last two hundred and fifty years. As I have not received my religious training from the men in the street or possibly in our legislative halls; so I am not concerned with what one in that capacity may choose to call those who happen to own allegiance to the Bishop of Newfoundland. The word Protestant is a term of quarrel. It implies no special attitude of resistance to the world, the flesh and the devil, but a surly attitude of suspicion always ready to break into violence towards the beliefs and practices of Christians. At one time Protestant was a respectable epithet, but as a good penny may in course of war and tear become a very offensive and dirty penny such as suggests contention and the need of washing, so that the word Protestant is now so used a word that to apply it to a man is to insult him. If a man takes upon himself and glories in it he gives in his shame. "Shimri" asks what is meant in the "Bill of Rights," 1688, by the expression "Protestant Religion," this is merely a phrase adopted by a secular tribunal owned and controlled by William III, who was saturated with the orthodoxy of Geneva, and as might naturally be expected professed great veneration for the "Protestant Reformed Religion and the Church of England" in this particular. This claim was rejected root and branch by the Ecclesiastical Synod known as Convocation, representing the parliament of the Church and for this act in not coquetting with Protestantism her Convocation was silenced by this secular tribunal for one hundred and fifty years. So much, then, for Synodical Authority provincially expressed. It is written somewhat earlier on Statute 23, Henry VIII., Cap. 29, (some ignorant people say this much married gentleman was a Protestant) "Our said Sovereign the King and all his national subjects as well spiritual as temporal, continue to be as obedient, devout Catholic and humble children of God and Holy Church as any."

Of course Thomas Cranmer and those associated with him did evince a certain amount of sympathy with the Continental reformers and utilized the services of some of them in the work of revision; this historical fact may or may not be interesting enough in itself but we are not concerned with what Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, et al believed or taught, as it is known to everybody the former literally boxed the compass upon the Doctrine of the Real Presence of the Sacrament of the Altar, up to the time that he was reduced to ashes. The criterion which we are to go by to-day is that which is set forth in our authorized formularies and not merely the individual views of any one no matter how eminent they may be. I am pleased to see that "Shimri" admits that the Church does not officially style herself Protestant; that is my contention and that is why I endeavoured in my former letter to recall his mind to the forgotten facts of history and to show him that his misapprehensions such as treason to the principles of the English Reformation.

The promise of your correspondent of another letter dealing with the Sacramental system will be awaited with interest, but I would like to remind him that in the type setting of my former letter the reference to Article 16 was due to a typographic error, as I had written Article XX which dealt exclusively with Sacraments.

I remain, yours truly,
CATHOLICUS ANGLICANUS.

The Horse.

Be kind to old Dobbin, the generous steed that labors whenever he's told, and see he has lots of the life-giving feed, and blanket his frame when he's cold. The horse is the best of the servants of man, the one that is anxious to please; he pulls on his feet just as long as he can, and pulls when he's down on his knees. He'll work when so sore that it's torture to walk, he'll work when he's feeble and lame; the story we'd hear, if the horses could talk, would fill human bosoms with shame. The horse is so faithful, so patient and good, he ought to be loved and caressed; too often men tam him with billets of wood, and score him with language unbecoming. Too often men work him until he is old, then sell him to wandering knaves, to roam o'er the country, be battered and sold, with other poor heart-broken slaves. Be kind to old Dobbin, who never refused to toil for you, early or late; whenever you look on a horse that's abused, you'll know that his owner's a skate. You'll know that his soul has been twisted awry, or made on a dissolute plan you'll know that he lacks all those qualities high which thrive in the heart of a Man.

LONDON, Feb. 22.

That the Government does not propose to exclude Ulster from operating in the Home Rule Bill is the statement made by Reynolds's Weekly whose parliamentary correspondent has more than once made correct prophecies. It claims substantial grounds for stating that the concessions offered by Asquith will be: (1) Additional representation in the Irish Senate for the Ulster minority; (2) Fresh provisions limiting the power of the Irish Parliament in certain matters affecting the minority; (3) Administration of the Customs and Post Office be retained by the Imperial authorities, and (4) An opportunity be given any county, including Ulster, to vote itself out of the operation, even before the Irish Parliament be constituted. Reynolds admits that it is useless to attempt to disguise the fact that Bethnal Green election was a bad blow, and that there is a steadily growing opinion in the part of Government supporters that things are not going well while the Government is blamed for endlessly precipitating the by-election. Masterman, after a few weeks' rest, will offer himself for election in another constituency roughly Norwich, or another London seat. Both Government and Opposition press show indications that the optimistic feeling that the opening of Parliament would find a solution of the deadlock, is disappearing and the Conservative press is again inquiring of the delay on the part of the Premier in not relieving the tension.

QUEENSTOWN, Feb. 22.
Fourteen lifeboat men were drowned when they went over from Ferndale to rescue the crew of the Norwegian barque Mexico, which was driven on the rocks, near Wexford, at night. Two of the lifeboats arrived the distress call of the Mexico, which was bound from Legun exico, to Falmouth. The first lifeboat was able to scramble on board the wrecked Mexico, when they remained all night, when the crew of the barque and the lifeboat men were landed safely on one of the islands. To-day they found the second lifeboat, which they had waited all night, had sunk with her crew of fourteen men.

PEKIN, Feb. 2.
It is estimated here that the bandits, led by White Wolf, massacre 300 men, women and children, who were sacked Luan Chow, on Jan. 9th. On that occasion they murdered Father Richard, the French Jesuit missionary, capturing and holding two others for ransom. An Army of 5,000 Chinese troops is now converging on White Wolf's strongly entrenched position, where he has a force of 2,000 bandits, half of whom are armed with modern weapons. It is stated here that the opportunity is being seized for exterminating White Wolf and his followers, fearing the will form a centre for another rebellion. The troops, however, show strong disinclination to come to close quarters with the bandits.

Among other anecdotes of University life, Dean Hole tells of an occasion when there was some doubt as to the locality of a city mentioned in a Greek text, and the lecturer addressed a youth who had just come up from the famous Shrewsbury school. "No, Mr. Bentley, you are a pupil of our great geographer, Dr. Butler, the Atlas of our age, who carried the world not on his shoulders, but in his head, and you can probably enlighten us as to the position of this ancient town." "I believe, sir," was the prompt reply, "that modern travelers are of the opinion that the city ought to be placed about ten miles to the south-east of the spot, which it now occupies on our map."

After receiving respectful thanks for the information, the informant told Dean Hole as they left the lecture room that he had never heard of the venerable city before, but that for the honor of Shrewsbury and the reputation of Dr. Butler he felt himself bound to say something.

The Goat.

By GEORGE FITCH.

Author of "At Good Old Swash."

There are two principal varieties of goats—the comic artist's goat and the goat.

The comic artist's goat is very familiar in America. It is a small animal with a reinforced head and the digestion of a cement mixer. It lives in the comic supplements of the newspapers, eats tin cans and playbills, and is used mainly to transport candidates for initiation into secret societies to the borders of the great beyond.

The other goat ekes out a precarious existence in this country and is not highly thought of. But in many other countries the goat supports one corner of the nation on his shoulders, and has no time to butt, because he is so busy producing wealth.

The foreign goat produces milk, cheese cloth, wigs, leather and steaks. He picks a living from blades of grass, tender young rocks, trees, barbed wire and weeds, and in return he enriches the family which has enough fortitude to live in his vicinity. In America the man who owns a goat asks for sympathy on the strength of it. But in Switzerland two goats make a family fat and four make it rich.

We devote a great deal of valuable time in America to the conservation of natural resources, but we have overlooked the goat. We have allowed the impression to grow up that, outside of political investigations, there is practically no use for a goat in this country. We should look at Switzerland, Palestine, Egypt, and India and be ashamed. If these countries can make a national asset and a bulwark against starvation out of the common lumbering variety of bullet-headed, thin-whiskered goat, what would they do with our imposing wealth?

Healthy and Unhealthy Lighting.

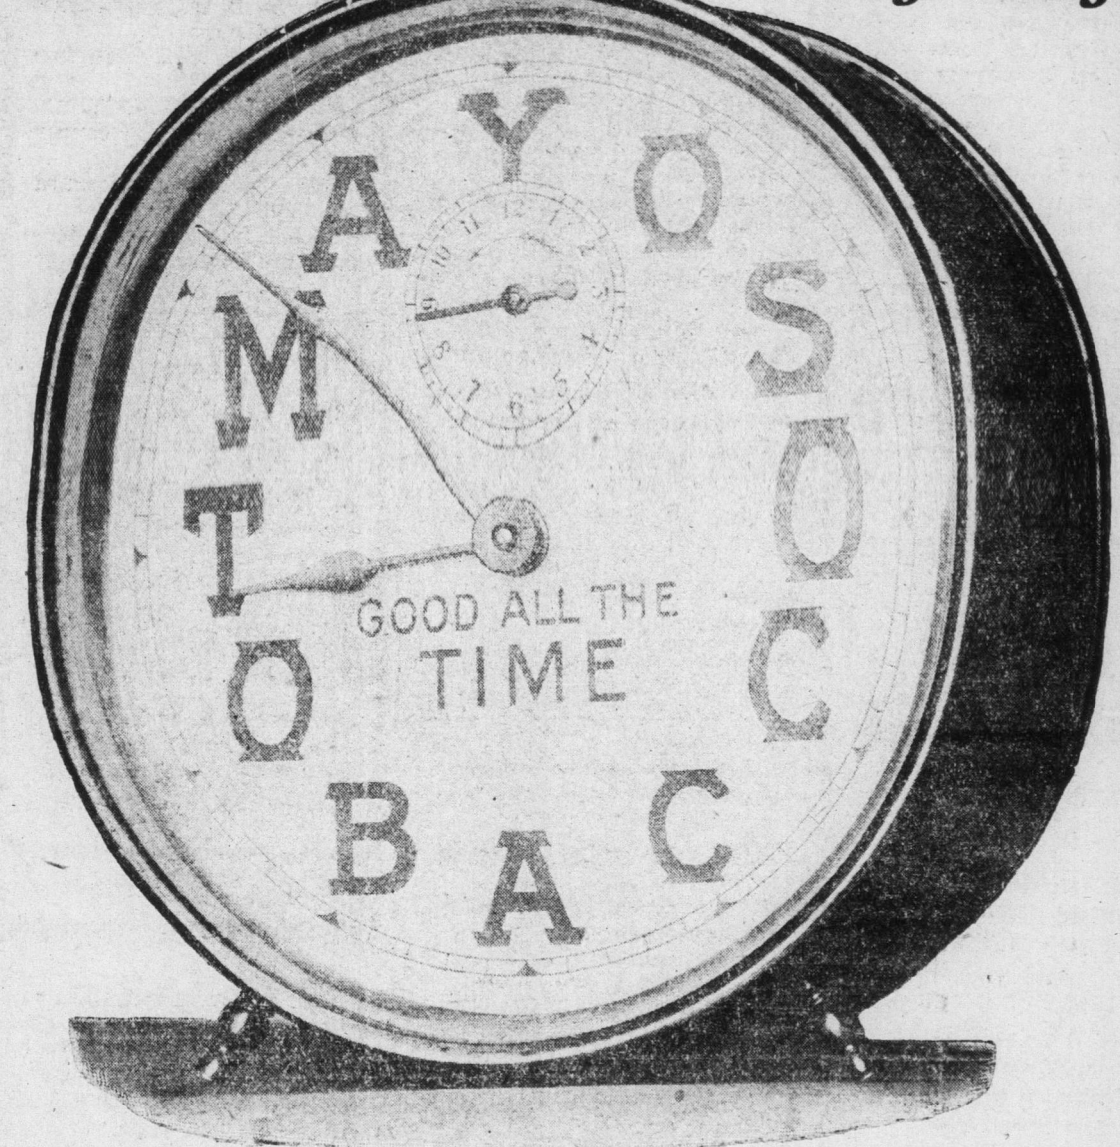

Gas, it may be said, vitiate the atmosphere. True. But it also helps to purify it. Its purifying power is greater than its vitiating power. Electricity does not vitiate, nor does it purify. Hear what three eminent men have said:—

Much evidence has lately been adduced to show that gas is more useful than the electric light in promoting efficient ventilation of air. It is for this amongst other reasons, that gas is being frequently substituted for the electric light. The latest example is, perhaps, the Society of Medical Officers of Health, which has recently installed gas on its premises, after experience with the electric light.—Dr. Jamieson B. Hurry.

He would merely add that no member who had experience of their meeting room under the old conditions could deny the improvement that had taken place since gas had been substituted for the electric light and the new system of heating and ventilation had been installed.—Dr. Reginald Duffield, before the Society of Medical Officers of Health.

I have in my mind's eye, at the moment, a hall which, in the old days, was lighted by gas, and in which a large audience could, with comfort, sit through an hour's lecture, or with pleasure through a three hours' dinner, but which, with the march of civilization, had its illumination changed from gas to electricity, the latter being employed with all the latest refinements to effect the lighting under the best conditions, with the result that any large gathering within its walls leads to a state little short of asphyxiation.—Vivian B. Lewis, Professor of Chemistry at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich.—Nov. 12.
