Mr. W. O. Kidder, R.R. No. 1, Noyan.

"I think Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is just wonderful for coughs and colds. Two bottles entirely relieved my cough after I had tried every other cough medicine I knew of. I feel sure it saved me from having pneumonia, and I cannot recommend it too highly."

Royal Wedding Secrets.

THE PRINCESS'S TROUSSEAU.

(By A COURT MODISTE.)
I think I may write advisedly that a great deal of nonsense has been written around the fact that, like every other bride, the Princess has a trousseau.

I have just seen an American paper which purports to give some details. It is foolishness almost from beginning to end. For this trousseau is, I suppose, unlike any other gathered by a Royal lady in anticipation of her wedding. I may call it a sensible as contrasted with a fantastic one. The American paper describes a collection of garments that fifty people could not wear out in a lifetime. I give one item—one thousand five hundred pairs of pure silk stockings. Other items are on an equally gargantuan scale.

A PRACTICAL TROUSSEAU.

First of all this is by no means a traditional trousseau. I am quite certain that Queen Victoria would not have "approved" of it for the reason that it does not conform to certain ideas that for almost untold generations have prevailed with regard to what a bride who is a daughter of a King should gather for her wedding.

When Queen Victoria married, for instance, there was collected together such an array of garments as could never have been worn out in her long life. I may say that after the death of Her Majesty there were still hoarded up many relics of that trousseau—hundreds of garments collected according to "Royal etiquette" that decreed numbers without discretion.

Everybody knows that Queen Mary is a very practical lady. For one thing, her childhood was not remarkable for unlimited means; for the Duke and Duchess of Teck were by no means rich. When the Princess "May" became the bride of our King she wanted a "sensible" trousseau. But Queen Victoria was "horrid," and with characteristic energy threw herself into the task of modelling it upon "Royal" lines. It was magnificent—and hopelessly impracticable.

Therefore one of the secrets of Princess Mary's trousseau is that it is designed on severely practical lines—articles bought with the knowledge that fashions change and to overstock is folly.

PERSONAL TOUCHES.

But it would be by no means right to assume that the Queen has (so to speak) dominated the selection. The Princess has her own mind on certain points.

tain points, colour, it may be whispered, with diffidence, by the influence of Queen Alexandra. The venerable Queen Mother is pathetically interested in every item connected with the wedding, and she has personally selected several of the articles that figure in the trousseau. Particularly she has chosen some exquisite table-centres—needlework in which she herself particularly delights, although her fading sight is fast forbidding even this recreation. It is the personal touches in the trousseau that will redeem it from the charge of too Spartan simplicity and severe effectiveness.

The afternoon dresses, coat and skirt, and tea gowns, have been made by a famous Bond Street firm who have enjoyed royal patronage for some years. The Princess has favored simplicity in style, but rather more artistic than was selected by the Queen. For most of the selections have been made in concert with the "last word" left to the bride.

The wedding dress is beautiful, and comes from Hanover Square, but, contrary to all that has been said about it, it will not differ in many respects from those worn by ladies of the Peerage. So many people have a vague idea that rivers of money must be needlessly squandered upon garments worn by Royalty. The going-away dress is by Madame Handley-Seymour, a lady who has achieved a reputation for ideas in garments designed to suit the personality of the wearer. It will be found that in this going-away dress she has achieved a triumph.

There are many jumpers, for, it may be whispered without offence that the Princess has an extraordinary affection for them. They are the work of the Officers' Families Industries, and are wonderful in colouring. Many other articles could be mentioned, but it would be unfair to describe a few only. But the keynote is originality and real feminine utility without slavish adherence to the bad old rule that the Royal trousseau must be costly and almost useless.

Queen Alexandra said once that her wedding trousseau was so wonderful that the first thing she did when she came to London was to "buy some clothes to wear."

Royalty to-day cannot afford to be extravagant even if they desired to be. The trousseau of the Princess strikes a new and far more sensible note.—Glasgow Weekly Herald.

Secret Compact of Italy and Spain.

The negotiation of a secret Italo-Spanish naval agreement was revealed in Paris by the royal military newspaper L'Action Francaise, which asserts the alliance is directed against France.

"Italy and Spain are reported to be on the verge of concluding a secret agreement concerning the use of naval forces in the Mediterranean," said the paper, "following the difficulties the English are raising regarding Tangiers. The adoption at Washington of Franco-Italian equality in tonnage leaves the French fleet inferior to Italian, because France has three seas to defend and its fleet must pass under the guns of Gibraltar."

The newspaper points out that the Balearic Islands and Sardinia are invaluable as submarine bases as they cut off France from its African colonies.

"France would be forced to detail at least two battleships to the Atlantic, while Italy would be enabled to concentrate its navy in territorial waters, where Spain would reinforce it."

The newspaper states that M. Sarraut at the Washington conference promised that the Chamber of Deputies would not be given the question until the American Senate ratified the treaty.

Don't Shake Hands!

Before very long it will be impossible to greet our friends without incurring the wrath of our doctors!

For many years we have been warned by the medical profession against kissing, and have not taken the warning. Now we are told that shaking hands is dangerous, and may be the means of passing ill health from one person to another.

What are we to do about it? It would not help matters to imitate the Arab, whose "Good-morning" is a vigorous hug. Other Asiatics rub cheeks or noses. Hindus fall in the dust when they meet their superiors, which is hardly any better, from a hygienic point of view; and South Sea Islanders often fling a jar of water over the head of a friend. Just the way to catch a cold.

If you telephone greetings to your acquaintance, you never know who has been using the mouthpiece before you. The only thing to do is to take a tip from the Australian natives. They simply stick their tongues out at each other.
