

ROYAL YEAST CAKES

Product of Canada.

It was known many years ago that yeast is an excellent thing for the many ills that result from disordered stomach or run-down blood condition. Lately eminent scientists have been investigating the matter thoroughly and their conclusions point to the fact that the beneficial effect of yeast has not been overrated. The yeast treatment is very simple and economical—and altogether harmless.

Before each meal eat a Royal Yeast Cake, or take a cake dissolved in water or fruit juices. The scientific investigators say that the curative elements in Royal Yeast are the vitamins and nuclei which it contains. It is certainly well worth a fair trial by those who suffer from any of the ailments mentioned above.

The Broken Circle!

CHAPTER XXXV.

"That which divides us is deeper than a grave," he said, with a slight shudder. "I shall never hear the sound of the waves again without thinking of this."

"Nor shall I. A man should be ashamed to confess cowardice; but I owe to you, Hettie, I hardly know how to take up the burden of life again."

The sweet whispered words gave him strength.

"We shall pass out of each other's life," she said. "Even that will be better than meeting always to suffer pain. After to-night, we shall see each other no more."

"It seems hard," he cried, bitterly, setting his teeth with the air of a desperate man, "though it is better for you and better for me that it should be so."

Then, as he was leaving her for ever, the temptation became too great. He clasped his arms round her, and gathered her to his heart. Once, twice, thrice he kissed her pale, sweet face, as one kisses the face of the best-beloved before the coffin-lid is closed. In silence then he put her away from him; in silence she sat where he had left her; and he went away over the great hill, which rose like a huge barrier between himself and that which was dearest to him on earth.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

The party at Dene Abbey broke up. Sir Basil went home to Glen, where he resolved to devote himself to work, in order to drive far from him all memories of the night that stood out, a clear and distinct picture, from the remainder of his life. The other guests departed to different parts of the kingdom. The duke and duchess went on the Continent; Sir Arthur Hatton and his beautiful niece returned to Brentwood.

The duchess, who had a warm and sincere affection for Leah, was troubled about her. She could not help suspecting that something was wrong between the lovers; for she had seen Sir Basil, on the evening before

Increases the action of the intestines

Hundreds of men and women have already found freedom from laxatives by eating Fleischmann's fresh yeast.

Doctors are now agreed that proper elimination of waste matter should be brought about by food. One doctor comes right out and states plainly that the indiscriminate use of cathartics is one of the causes of constipation.

Physicians all over the country are recommending Fleischmann's fresh yeast because it is a fresh food, rich in those elements which keep the intestines healthy. In one series of tested cases, normal functions were restored in from 3 days to 5 weeks.

Try it out for yourself. Begin today by adding 2 or 3 cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast to your everyday diet. Keep it up and see how normally and regularly your intestines act. Be sure it's Fleischmann's Yeast—the familiar tin-foil package with the yellow label. Place a standing order with your grocer.

he left, with such a strange expression on his face. But then Leah seemed happy. The duchess, than whom no more kindly woman ever lived, decided that, if she were in the general's place, she should hurry on the marriage. She had an uncomfortable feeling that something unpleasant would happen if this were not done.

As for Leah, her fears and forebodings had vanished. Basil, of his own free will, had returned to Glen in order to hasten the preparations for the wedding. That being the case, she could hardly charge him with want of love; she had made herself unhappy with fancies. When the Duchess of Rosedene had said good-bye to her, she had added: "I shall be back for your marriage, Leah, in the spring; not all the lions of Europe would keep me from that." Leah's lovely face had brightened at the words.

The time was drawing near now in which she would be united for evermore to the one man whom she loved so passionately. A few more weeks of the changing autumn and then would come winter; the spring would soon follow, and then there would be no more parting, no more sorrow. They would be together until Death divided them.

During these days the memory of her sister grew less clear and distinct to Leah; the past was like a dream to her—she lived entirely in the present, father, sisters, the many places she had called home, the troubles and humiliations of her early life, had faded away. Leah Ray, who was to have been a "female lecturer," a prophetess among the people, and Leah Hatton, the famous beauty and heiress, were two very different people.

The general had told her to spare no expense. She was to have a trousseau fit for a queen. The fortune that Sir Arthur had given to her was to be made her own by marriage deeds and settlements. From all these splendors Leah would steal away to look at what was most precious to her—the golden wedding-ring lying in the little morocco case; the ring that had been taken from so many dead fingers, that had held so many living hopes, and that she was to wear for the rest of her life. She cared more for that solitary treasure than for all else that belonged to her.

As they journeyed home from Dene to Brentwood, Sir Arthur saw more clearly than ever how entirely his niece's heart was given to Sir Basil. He was even amused, although he did his best to hide his amusement. No matter on what subject the conversation began, it turned always to Sir Basil. He might discuss the autumn woods, the old gray churches, the pretty homesteads, anything and everything but she managed always to bring Sir Basil in at the end. He laughed quietly to himself, thinking the ways of lovers very wonderful ways.

"Do you think Sir Basil will come over to Brentwood to-night?" was the most eager question she asked.

"How long has he been away?" said the general.

"Four days," replied Leah.

"Then I should say most decidedly that we shall find him waiting for us at the station."

He was right; Sir Basil had ridden over to the station at Arley, intending to go back with them to Brentwood.

There is surely nothing so pathetic as a great love—nothing so beautiful or so sad. Leah's face was a picture to see when her eyes fell on her foster.

Sir Basil had resolved to do his best. There should be no more lingering in the pleasant paths of temptation for him. He would honestly try to make the girl who loved him happy.

When between her brilliant, beautiful face and his own there rose the shadow of a pale, sweet face drowned in tears, he turned resolutely away; he would not see it.

Leah thought that he looked very ill, pale, worn, and exhausted.

"You wanted me to take care of you," she said. "What have you been doing to yourself, Basil? I shall not let you leave us again. You look as though you had been ill."

"I am well enough, Leah; you need not be anxious about me, I have been busy, I find that it does not do to be long from home. My land-steward is one of the best men I could have for my purpose; but there is no man living can take the whole responsibility of an estate from its owner. I am glad you have returned, Leah; now we shall have some weeks, at least, of peace."

He spoke in the tone and with the manner of one tried beyond endurance; and again it struck Leah how strangely and sadly he was altered.

There was a warm welcome for the travellers at Brentwood; every one seemed delighted. The household were all in grand array, ready to receive them; the fine old mansion seemed to have put on its brightest look to welcome them. Then Sir Arthur, Leah, and Sir Basil sat down to dinner. They found it a great change from the large party that had gathered round the dinner-table at Dene Abbey.

"After all," said the general, "it is impossible to live in a crowd. One requires quiet every now and then."

On this occasion Leah looked more lovely, in Sir Arthur's eyes, than she had ever looked in her magnificent toilets at Dene. She wore a dress of rich, white lace, with ribbons of pale lemon color, a magnificent pomegranate blossom in her hair, and in the bodice of her dress—a toilet that suited her to perfection. She had never looked happier. The sense of being at home again, the fact of having Basil with her, of knowing that he had been working hard so as to bring the time of their marriage nearer, the recollection that she should not leave Brentwood again until she left it as his wife—all these things made her wonderfully and unutterably happy.

Sir Basil's heart was moved when he looked at her; she so well deserved the greatest love that any man could give her. And he? Ah, if Heaven would but take from him the memory of the pale sweet face drowned in tears! If he could forget that for one half-hour in his life he had known what true happiness was!

After dinner, under the pretense of looking at an accumulation of business letters, but in reality to indulge in ten minutes' slumber, the general went for half an hour to his study, and Leah and Sir Basil were left together. A sense of the cruel wrong that a loveless marriage would be to her, came over the baronet; and he vowed to himself that he would make amends to her by increased kindness, by studying her wishes in every way. His little dreamed how keenly and clearly the eyes of love saw.
