other claimant. I cannot be kind to you all."

"No, thank heaven, not so kind as I would have you," whispered Dr. Pym.

"I come," said the young London actor, "to crave the wee pink rose out of your hair; you can't refuse me while you hold such a wilderness of blossom about you."

Bethel laughed and complied, but as she gave the flowers and looked upon the heaped-up treasures which lay on a table near, all tribute to her praise, she thought of Dan in his dark prison house, and wished she could give the flowers to him. Then, with a little sigh, she prepared to depart, when madame stepped forward, saying:

"Let me pin up your skirts, dear. These passages, I know by experience, are not devoid of dust, and dust is a dire enemy to white satin."

As madame pinned up the skirt, Rose turned to coquette with the London actor. Bethel, however, prepared to leave the room, saying:

"Come, Miss Eston; it is getting late."

She left the apartment somewhat impatiently, as she spoke, and Rose followed with the light. As she passed she heard Ben Bonner say:

"What pretty feet Miss Regan has! I declare, it's a sin ever to hide them."

Miss Eston's eyes followed his to Bethel's satin shoes, and short frilled muslin skirts. Then she stepped after her with an evil look in her green-gray eyes.

The passages were long, damp and narrow. When they were half-way between the green-room and the dressing-rooms, Rose stumbled, fell, and the light she carried lay right beneath Bethel's petticoats. In an instant they ignited and Bethel was a sheet of flame.

In an agony of fear she rushed past Rose, into the green-room, crying:

"For God's sake, someone save me! A thick rug to wrap me! A thick rug to wrap me! A thick rug to wrap me!"

For a moment all seemed paralyzed, then, quick as thought, Dr. Pym picked up a rug from the fireplace, and Ben tore down a heavy damask curtain and rolled Bethel in them till the fire was subdued.

Bethel was by this time in a dead faint from fright, but madame and Mrs. Bonner quickly restored her to consciousness.

Rose Eston came now into the green-room, and looking on her fallen foe with a strange, shuddering dread, asked of the doctor:

"Is she much hurt?"

Dr. Pym, who was almost beside himself with agony to see Bethel so disfigured, replied:

"I hope not. You see the flames were about the lower part of her body, therefore the more dangerous. I must take the most prompt action by the help of madame, find out the extent of the damage."

The room was quickly cleared, and as Ben departed, Bethel opened her eyes with a cry of pain, and seeing Rose lifted herself on one arm and exclaimed with intense scorn:

"You mean, pitiful coward! you mockery of womanhood! so you would kill me, would you, in this cruel way, because I have stepped before you in the race of fortune? That stumble of mine was not done cleverly enough. I saw you hold the candle to my petticoats. Hide your face with shame; were this wicked act of yours known, you would be hissed off the stage by any honest audience. Oh, doctor, I am faint; the pain is terrible! For God's sake, give me relief! Oh, it was cruelly done! I have not merited such treatment at her hands. Give me aid, oh, surely, this is not death, this sickening pain and beating heart!"

Bethel laughed heartily.

"How sentimental you are all at once, doctor, and by my life, here comes an-

THE WHEEL.

HOW THE WORLD ASSIMILATES IMPROVEMENTS.

How quickly the world assimilates new improvements which in many instances radically affect the habits of living of a large proportion of the public, has been often demonstrated. Electric lights, telephones and trolley cars were all introduced to popular use within the memory of the present generation. Yet, whoever stops to wonder at an electric light, who marvels at the "no pulley—no pusher" street car, and who gives the telephone more than a passing thought—save to register a kick at unsatisfactory service. And the bicycle came in, was a nine days' wonder, and then settled into the way of a commonplace utility. And thoughtless people said the "fad had died out." No, it merely became an every-day necessity. It excited no more comment than electric lights or telephones or trolley cars. Being more personal than any other modern utility it is less talked about than the public utilities, for the same reason that people do not frequently discuss their shoes or clothes or hats. Yet the bicycle is now almost as much a part of the daily life of the public and a personal necessity to thousands as their clothing or shoes or hats.

Slater Shoe Advertising.

Shoe Cost.

Short talks by the Slater Shoe ad. man, No. 1.

It costs less to advertise and sell the "Slater Shoe" than it costs to sell ordinary shoes without advertising.

If a thousand people know a shoe is good more people will want that shoe than if only ten people know it.

If the "whole city" knows it more people will want it than if only the people passing the store where it is sold, know it merely by hearsay.

The "Slater Shoe" makers, knowing the "Slater Shoe" will back up the expense of advertising it, give it wide publicity—they tell the "whole city" about it.

It follows then as the "Slater Shoe" is better known through advertising than unadvertised shoes, that more "Slater Shoes" of equal grades are sold, which is a fact.

So the fixed charges of manufacturing, wholesaling and retailing are divided among a greater number of pairs of shoes than is the case in unknown shoes of smaller sales.

For instance:—Take a salesman's salary at $2.00 per day:—if his sales are only ten pairs per day the cost of retailing alone is 20 cents per pair.

But if advertising will enable him to sell fifty pairs per day the cost is only four cents per pair and thus such fixed expenses as rent, light, taxes, salaries, interest, etc., are reduced and divided.

So the wearer as well as the maker is benefited by the liberal and judicious advertising of a good article like the "Slater Shoe"—and it would be rank folly to risk a large amount of money to advertise a shoe which the wearers would not buy a second time.
