An Interesting Lecture by Rev. Canon Car-michael at Shaftesbury Hall Last Night. Railway on Simcoe Street—The Yonge Street Pavement—Tenders for Road-The above was the subject of a lecture delivered last night in Shaftesbury hall by Rev. Canon Carmichael of Hamilton. The noon, Ald. Turner [chairman]. Taylor, nenced by stating the country which we have mainly to deal with in treating of this man is England, the reigning monarch Queen Anne, the government, the whig dynasty, under the leadership and control of Rodolph. In brief, the lecturer then referred to the state of the country politically and socially at this period. Not only, he said, had political honor departed from England to some other country, but slao social life was at its lowest obb. The ladies, instead of attending to their proper sphere, talked and read politics. They could be seen on the public platform painted and powdered, standing under lights which lit up their countenances with splendor, magnificent at which time one would think they were their own daughters; but see them next morning before one had addied the work which nature had failed to but see them next morning before one had done the work which nature had failed to accomplish and then note the contrast. Now they resemble more then great-grand-mother, and not only did the women of this time fall short of a woman's proper sphere by coming thus in contact with men, but they also imbited other and worse habits peculiar to the sterner sex, namely, that of gambling. If in playing at any game of chance, on the issue of which there was a stake, a man should lose, his fair partner would laugh as she coolly collected the stakes, but if on the other hand he should gain, she would curse him. But, notwithstanding the vices of this time, it was an age of essay writing, and smong the greatest we find Addison, Steele and last, but not least, Swift.

Dean Swift, as the latter is commonly styled, was an Irishman by birth, education and training. After leaving Trinity college, Dublih, and being ordained, he became rector of Longford. The question we then ask is, "Was he ardent in his religion." We answer, "No," neither were any of his time. In short, he was a high and dry dunchman. In summing up his different professions and powers the lecturer styled him dergyman, poet, historian, pamphleteer, guider of men, ruler of men, and, what is harder still, of women. The lecturer said he did not at all approve of the clergyman of Anne's reign, whe, like dogs, would preach whatever way the wind blew. Should the Tory ministry be in power the theme of their sermon would be Toryism, and visa versa. As a rule the elegrymen of the time of their sermon would be Toryism, and visa versa. As a rule the elegrymen of the fire preachers of his own day and he shines like a diamond among them, but compare him the clergymen of the present day and he becomes as anthrecite.

And the steret would. The chart was therefore the paltry instruments of their patron's will confer with the clergymen of the company would have to be companied to treat well known that he were the paltry instruments of the research of the contractors were doing bet coward. But before long his political tal-ents became so well known that he was sent over to England to treat with the tory government, and here during his four years' sojourn, he accomplished more with his pen than any man of his time with his sword; in short, he changed the whole course of affairs, and as it were, had his hand on the strings of government with the power of swaying it which way he would. On his return to Ireland he astonished every one how he could control the whole Irish people, from the queen's representative down to the lowest menial which is more than some of our modern statesmen can boast. If Swift lived now how he would shake his hands at the fanatics now in Ireland, how he would rage at atics now in Ireland, how he would rage at them and say, O, fool cannot you see you have rights to demand what England has a light to give. And this great man, hopeless of ever seeing justice done to his country died glorying in the thought that he was descending to a grave where, no more, fiery indignation would rend his broken heart.

Damages for the Loss of a Husband.

At the trial of Shannon v. the Grand Trunk railway in Brantford a non-suit was entered, on the ground that the company could not be held liable for the negligence of their servants. The husband of the plaintiff was working on a side line leading to a gravel pit, and by reason of the misplacement of a switch, a train backed on the wrong siding, doming into collision with some cars, on which the deceased was at the collision of the cars, on which the deceased was at the cars, or which the deceased was at the cars. the wrong siding, teming into collision with some cars, on which the deceased was at work and thereby cousing his death. The deputation expressed its opposition to the con struction of a street railway on Simcoe street, between Queen and Front, as contained in a petition presented to the council Monday night. Ald. Farley wanted York street substituted for Simcoe street, and John Millett, a member of the deputation, said York street would satisfy the residents of St. Patrick's ward as well as Simcoe street would. The chairman redoie the work which nature had failed to accomplish and then note the contrast. CATARRH.

As we have seen in tracing the relation to Nasal Catarrh and throat diseases to consumption, there are times, perhaps days, or even whole weeks together, when the affection gives little or no annoyance, and the patient flatters himself that it has entirely passed away, when a sudden cold or other cause of irritation occurs, and the progress of the disease is materially hastened. At this season of the year, not unfrequently, the disease becomes apparent, and admonishes the patient of the terrible future which must follow if the inflammation is not speedily allayed. Many there are who endeavor to convince themselves that the evil is not of any magnitude, and will soon pass away with the special cause of the irritation; but experience will prove to them the fearful error as it has to thousands who have preceded them to that "bourne from whence no traveller returns."

No one, therefore, who is afflicted with masal catarrh or throat affection is safe while it is suffered to exist. Often slight causes give rise to serious complications, for example: The Uvula, or p ndulous organ which hangs down from the palatine arch, just over the roots of the tongue is very apt to get inflamed, and its parts becoming relaxed, it stretches out lengthwise, so that its exercing the content of the cont
