

LIFE AND DEATH.

By MILTON GOLDMITH.

Two snowflakes born of winter's storm
Fall through the air—
Two downy flakes of star-like form
Beyond compare.
One rested on the sun-kissed ground,
And thawing, died;
While one a sheltered ice-drift found,
And death defied.

Two human souls, by God's decree,
Were sent to earth;
Each with a different destiny
Was given birth.
One struggled 'gainst an evil fate,
Nor long survived;
The other, born of happier state,
Grew strong and thrived.

O, who can solve the hidden sense
Of God's design?
We trust in His omnipotence
And love divine.
Not length of years, but deeds sublime,
Can call us blest;
He longest lives, who in his time
Has lived the best.

Practical Instruction.

There is a tendency in some of our schools for the deaf to establish a post-graduate course. In the literary department we think this unnecessary. When a pupil has completed the regular curriculum in any of the schools, and desires to take a higher course, the College is the proper place for him to go. Or if he can not do that, then he should rely largely on his own resources, and seek that knowledge from books, and contact with the speaking world, which can not be gotten in the lecture room. Indeed, we do not know, but that this experimental way of getting information, is the best after all. It often tends to make a more practical, well-rounded character, and consequently, one more likely to achieve success in life, than if nurtured in the lap of literary ease. The advanced education is no part of the legitimate work of these state schools. They can better fulfill their mission by confining their efforts to more primary instruction, and laying broad, and deep the foundation, on which the pupil can build, after leaving the Institution, either at college, or in the practical school of life. We think that the step taken by the Ontario School for the Deaf is much more to the point, and promises the accomplishment of the greatest good to the greatest number. The authorities of that school have decided to give a post-graduate course in the industrial department. This has the merit of practicability, and is a reform that is greatly needed. The time allowed in the shops is much too short to make skilled workmen. Our boys, even the brightest of them, can gain only an imperfect knowledge of the trades which they attempt to learn, with the limited opportunities afforded. In fact, many of them are much too young, for some years after entering school, to be greatly profited by industrial training. If they could be allowed to return to the Institution for a few years, and take a special course of instruction in those various trades, they would go out into the world much more thoroughly equipped for its duties and struggles, than under the present system. And this seems to be more reasonable, because there is no other place provided where they can perfect themselves in these industries. In the literary department, pupils have the college to fall back upon; but when a boy intends to follow a trade, if he does not learn it thoroughly at the Institution, he enters the race, in competition with skilled mechanics, under the disadvantage of being himself an unskilled workman. By all means let us have a more extended course of industrial training.—West Virginia Tab.

Mother, Your Girl;

Amid the practice of some of the young female population in using the public highway for their indiscriminate rambles, we are prompted to call attention of mothers and guardians to the fact that the girl who gives way to a desire to gal about the streets, and cultivate the acquaintance of young men and act the simpering simpleton, is laying the foundation of a senseless after life. "Ten to one when married she will develop into a slatternly gossip, if no greater misfortune befalls her. It is the girl who loves home and helps her mother that wins the model man and becomes an ornament to womanhood. The girl who does this and devotes some of her spare time to reading, and strives for the grace of mental culture, commands the respect and esteem of everybody, while the gadding ornament only wins the admiration that is not worth having.

For the Printer Boys.

Do you want to be a good printer? If you do, here are a few hints—

1. Space every line exact, and divide the space among the different words of the line, making the space as near the same between them all as you can. Do not put a wide space between two words, and a thin space between other words of the same line. It also saves time in correcting to glance over and see that there are no mistakes in it.

2. Read your stickful and correct the mistakes before emptying it.

3. Do not hurry. Better set one stickful without mistakes and spaced exact, than two or three stickfuls with mistakes and some short lines.

4. Do not guess at your copy. If you do not understand a word, or know how to divide a word, look in the dictionary or ask the foreman.

5. Try to remember how to do anything you are told or shown by the foreman, so the next time you can do it yourself.

6. Be very careful in correcting proof. Never leave an error because it is hard to correct. If any changes except of letters of the same thickness occur, always take the line out of the galley and put it in a stick. Spacing can't be made exact in any other way.

7. If you drop type on the floor, pick it up at once, before it is stepped on and broken. And when you see type, or a lead, or anything on the floor as you go about, pick it up and put it where it belongs.

8. Above all, improve your time. When at work, attend to business. Don't let your mind wander from the work before you. Remember that if you want to learn enough about printing hero to be able to get work in other offices when you leave school, you must try hard to learn. These hints are necessary, as foremen in other offices will not have printers who do not space exact, set good proofs and correct all mistakes marked on the proof sheet, and correct them right.

I want to teach all the boys to be good printers, but if you do not try to learn I can not teach you.—The Register

Honor the Dear Old Mother.

Time has scattered the snowy flakes on her brow, plowed deep furrows on her cheek—but is she not sweet and beautiful now? The lips which have kissed many a hot tear from the childish cheek are the sweetest lips in the world.

The eye is dim, yet it glows with the rapt radiance of a holy love which can never fade.

O, yes, she is a dear old mother. Her sands of time are nearly run out, but feeble as she is they will go further and reach down lower for you than any other on earth.

You cannot walk into midnight where she cannot see you; you cannot enter a prison whose bars shall keep her out; you can never mount a scaffold too high for her to reach that she may kiss and bless you.

In evidence of her deathless love, when the world shall despise and forsake you—when it leaves you by the wayside to die unnoticed, the dear old mother will gather you up in her feeble arms, carry you home and tell you of all your virtues until you almost forget that your soul is disfigured by vice.

Lovè her tenderly, and cheer her declining years with holy devotion.—The Bugle Call.

Our Men of the Future.

Boys should not consider it manly to use profane language.

They ought not to hold others up to ridicule anywhere.

They should not indulge their propensity of playing tricks.

They ought not to read dangerous books and papers.

They ought not to interrupt others in their conversation.

Neither ought they to deceive their teachers or their parents.

Boys ought not to smoke, for it injures their nervous system.

Boys should not backbite others. It is mean to do so.

Boys should have the greatest possible horror of intoxicating drink.

Boys should shun evil companions as they would demons from below.

Boys should ever bear in mind that God's eye is upon them always.

Boys should continually struggle to overcome their special bad habits.

Boys, cultivate self-respect; you are men of the future.—Orphan's Bouquet,

At Fair Education.

What constitutes a fair education of the deaf? is a very pertinent question, and one that is easily answered. Give a deaf-pupil sufficient power over language to read and fairly understand the news paragraphs of a daily paper, or some weekly journal, together with a knowledge of the use of the tools of one trade or another, and you have supplied him with a fair education. But one of the dangers of "multiplication of schemes" is an injudicious selection of the subject which a child may be taught. A good start consists of putting him or her into a situation immediately on leaving school. With such conditions, I have yet to see the deaf boy or girl on whose success I would not stake my reputation.—British Deaf-Mute.

No medical preparations that have been used at home or prescribed by family physician will be allowed to be taken by pupils except with the consent and direction of the Physician of the Institution.

Parents and friends of Deaf children are warned against Quack Doctors who advertise cures and appliances for the cure of deafness. In very cases out of 100 they are frauds and only want money for which they do no return. Consult well known medical practitioners in cases of deafness and be guided by their counsel and advice.
