

Legislature and who was one of Western Ontario's widely-known medical practitioners, occurred at his home in Ingersoll. Although confined to his home for the greater part of a year, it was only recently that he took to his bed to await the final summons. He won for himself an enviable name as a public-spirited citizen in connection with civic affairs, and in provincial politics as the Liberal representative for South Oxford he was held in high esteem. He served the town very ably as Mayor and in other capacities. He was an able speaker, and whether in Parliamentary debate or otherwise invariably won the closest attention of his audience. Dr. McKay was a member of St. John's Lodge, A. F. and A.M. Besides his wife, he leaves two sons, Lieut. Wilfrid McKay, of the Ingersoll Company of the 168th Battalion, Ross, and two daughters, Misses Eleanor and Betty, at home.

NORMAN JAMES LANG YELLOWLEES.

Word of the accidental death by drowning of Dr. Norman Yellowlees, 676 Spadina avenue, Toronto, who was at Salonika with No. 4 General Hospital, was received at Toronto University, and the family were immediately notified.

Dr. Yellowless was with the No. 4 Hospital when it took over the work at Shorncliffe last July. A letter from him, descriptive of the busy life led by the doctors, who were called upon to treat an average of 200 operative cases a month, was published in Toronto. In that letter he described the review of the Shorncliffe garrison by the King and Earl Kitchener, at which 40,000 Canadians were on parade and at which he was present.

Dr. Yellowlees went to Greece with his unit in October, and on the way had a few days in Egypt. They had the distinction of being the first Canadian unit to be sent to the Balkans. He graduated from the University of Toronto Bachelor of Arts in 1907, Bachelor of Medicine in 1909, and the following year was appointed to the staff of the Toronto General Hospital. Since 1911 he has been engaged in the practice of his profession in Toronto and was physician in charge of the nurses at the Toronto General Hospital. A year ago he left with the University Base Hospital as Adjutant. He was one of the most promising of the younger physicians and his loss will be keenly felt, not only by the staff of the hospital at Salonika, but by his friends in Toronto.

Captain Yellowlees was trying to reach a wreck on horseback. With his horse he sank in soft mud while fording a swiftly-flowing stream.
