settling a labour dispute. One thing is sure, however: this bill has been improved by the work of parliament and our party is pleased that at least some hon. members from other parties recognized the importance of speaking of gearing wages to the cost of living. That is something we have been clamouring for in all sectors of the economy and for once, this evening, our ideas made some headway. I heard colleagues of all parties speak of it.

Mr. Speaker, before ending my remarks, I should like to say that the I am surprised at my hon. colleague from York South (Mr. Lewis) paying that he will vote against the bill, against the back-to-work order, when his party spent I don't know how much time proposing amendments in conjunction with the government, which amendments were accepted. Finally, Mr. Chairman, if the NDP vote against the bill, I wonder what logic there is in their attitude.

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I perhaps travelled farther than any other member of the House of Commons to get here, and it would be inappropriate if I did not say a word or two about some others who have been completely overlooked in the few days during which this debate has been going on. If it were not for the communications network that was maintained by the CN in the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories we would have had virtually no communication with the outside world, electronically at least. That network has been maintained during the strike by supervisors most of whom were workers at one time. Therefore, I think I would be remiss if I did not extend our appreciation to those supervisors who provided the service to these often forgotten areas of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Munro, Hamilton East) which was agreed to on the following division:
