The period of greatest egg production in the life of a hen that is fed and handdled with the sole object of getting the largest possible yield of market eggs is dled with the sole object of getting the largest possible yield of market eggs is the second six months of her life—between the day upon which she lays her first pullet egg, usually at the age of five and one-half to seven months, and the time she starts to molt the following summor. To make successful winter, layers the early hatched pullets should begin laying by Nov. 1, when the prices of new-laid eggs are high, and should continue to lay at the rate of forty to fifty eggs a day per hundred hens until February, and thereafter at the rate of sixty to seventy-five eggs a day per hundred hens until moiting time.

A good depth of litter covering the floor will encourage the vigorous scratching necessary to replace the accustomed outdoor exercise. The active hen is most productive, and if the fowls are kept busy scratching for their grain the first few weeks they will begin laying sooner and will have little time to cultivate the unprofitable habits of egg-eating and eather-pulling. Wheat straw and shredied corn fodder are excellent litter materials.

Preparing Roosts.

In preparing nests and roosts bear in mind that the light breeds, such as Leghorns and Campines, require six to eight inches of roost space and nests twelve inches square, while heavier fowls, such as Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes, need ten to twelve inches of roost space and nests fourteen inches square.

As eggs are about seventy per cent. water, some arrangement should be made to supply the fowls with drinking water heated to a comfortable temperature. An ordinary two-part galvanized gallon fountain, filled with warm water and set upon a hot soapstone, will do this, or a larger fountain heated by a small lamp will solve the problem with a minimum of attention.
