the investigation into the Hamilton polling the individuals who supplied the fraud workers with the money by which they were paid for their criminal work. These individuals were men occupying high places, and in order to screen them the investigation is to be summarily wound up. The Hamilton investigation has a strong family resemblance to the West Elgin commission. The individuals who devised the criminant work and who paid for it are shielded in each case, while the poor, ignorant men who were the tools of criminals-in-chief are fined and imprisoned. Much better would it have been to have no investigation at all than this mockery of justice. But what can we expect in Ontario, when the Government itself, the supreme head of the criminal law, is charged with complicity in various election frauds?
