Now I know he is never left alone, perhaps brooding over my lot in life. Yes, you have added much to my peace, and his happiness." His quick pace slackened, and he sighed deeply.

"Let me speak to you this once," he said; "no words can tell what I suffered in jail; the bewilderment, the rage, the despair. When I had been there a week only, it felt like years. Then, in time, I began to take a clear and deliberate view of the life I had ruined at the outset. There is no way by which our fellow-men can be convinced that one has really repented. must strike out on a new career, either abroad or at home. My father in his first letter to me in prison, made this quotation, 'There is a wondrous alchemy in time and the power of God to transmute our faults, errors, sorrows, nay, our sins themselves, into I began to realize this before I left the jail."

We had already reached Churchwarden street, and his step grew slower. I was glad of it, for I wished to hear all he would say in this revelation of himself; though my eyes filled with tears for him.

"I made two resolutions," he went on, "never to seek or possess money. It was the vow of poverty. The men I could induence would be poor; and my poverty should be actual, not unreal. I would have no money to give! and but sympathy and advice, and personal help. The second resolu-

"how we have missed you, Miss 'A Bricot and I." After that walk through the quiet city streets Felix and I were friends. He did not shun intercourse with Abby and me as he had done before. Very often he came up from the dispensary, when the last patient was gone, to our schoolroom overnead, and played hour. He helped us greatly through the examination when the government school inspector visited us. In the long dark evenings of the winter he came home earlier from the music by the kitchen fire, telling us stories, both laughable and sad, of the people among whom he was working. Sometimes Abby and I went with him to the General Information Offices, at which he was engaged three nights in the week. These were shops, rented by Mr. Manning, which were open from 6 o'clock till nine, where working men could go in to write letters, or have them written for them, on payment of a small fee; and where two nights in the week they could have the advice of a lawyer on any points of law which were too difficult for Felix to solve. Many disputes were settled, and many quarrels made up, at these unpretentious offices. A register was kept of wants to be supplied, and of helpers willing to give their services unpaid. There was seldom an evening when a nurse for the coming night was not wanted; and still more seldom when there was no one to volunteer the kindly office. Sometimes a donkey-cart was entered as free for a certain day; and if no one applied for it, Felix was sure to know of some poor invalid, or bevy of little children, who would be the better for an outing; and frequently it would be himself who would lead the donkey. In these shops Abby and I found, plenty to do; and Grace Lambert was a frequent visitor, though she hindered more than she helped. Always she required Felix to see her safely home.

Now and then we saw paragraphs in the daily papers relating to the measures taken to trace and arrest my step-father, But neither Mr. Temple-ton nor Mrs. Blandford made any attempt to see me again. It was necescessary to wait in patience for the chance of learning my name and parentage. But it was not in patience I was awaiting the course of events. I was happy, and my life, narrow as it looked, was full of work and interest. Our old life receded into a dimmer distance day by day. But if I was happy, Abby was happier; she looked less faded, her eyes were brighter, and her step more alert. It was the best thing that had ever happened to her, she averred, when she lost all her money in the Lincoln Companies, and went to the meeting of creditors.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The passing of the busy days brought us quickly to the month of April; though in the city we could see little of the spring, except the clearer skies and longer hours of light. Mr. Manning, however, kept our window-silis supplied with spring flowers from his garden or Epping Forest. These were often brought by Grace Lambert. When she came, if Felix was not in, it was her custom to get me upstairs alone in our little sitting-room, and there pour into my reluctant ear conidences I was vexed to listen to. I felt sure she loved Felix, and there was little room for doubt that he loved her. But I did not care to hear their attachment expatiated upon.
"It makes me so miserable," moaned, "because there is no hope for us. If Felix were not unhappy, I could bear it for myself." "But why is there no hope?" I asked, with but scant sympathy for her, and earnest sympathy for Felix. It was she who had done all the seeking. "Oh, my father would never, never consent," she exclaimed. "You forget, Phebe, that he is Lord Lambert, and I am the Honorable Grace! I have been that for the last six years, and I never forget it. No, remember 'No-blesse oblige,' Though my heart should break, I could not marry a man who has a stigma upon him." "Though he is the best man you know?" I remarked bitterly. "Yes, he is the best, the dearest, the noblest!" she exclaimed. "But it cannot be. I never forgot when he is present that once he was in jail.

I suppose many girls would not feel the disgrace as I do; you, for instance, dearest Phebe." they know I have nothing to give mind," I interrupted. "Why did his father urge him to this suicidal course?" she continued. "I was speaking of him to Sir Reginald Flow-

(To be continued.) In the matter of pedigree, the 18year old prince, who is the heir to the throne of Japan, seems to hold the lead. He is, it is said, the last male descendant in the order of primogeniture of a dynasty which has reigned for 2,600 years.

strong, when she is really enduring in silence almost unbearable tortures. She meets him at the door on his return from work or busismile and a kiss. To be sure, she looks a ness with a little white and pallid, but she is vivacious and cheerful in his presence, and he does not realize that anything is wrong. If he had but come home during the middle of the day, he would have found, instead of the cheerful wife, a weak, sickly, nervous invalid, with headache, pains in the back, "stitches" in the side, burning and dragging down sensations and utter despondency and melancholy. In almost every case of this kind the woman is really suffering from weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organism. Frequently she does not realize her own condition. If she does, she shrinks from undergoing the "examina-tions" and "local treatments" insisted upon by the average physician. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the medicine needed by women who suffer in this way. It acts directly on the sensitive organs concerned and makes them strong, healthy and vigorous. It allays inflamma heals ulceration, soothes pain and tion, neats ulceration, sootnes pain and tones and builds up the shattered nerves. It transforms weak, sickly, nervous, despondent invalids into happy, healthy wives and competent mothers. It fits for wife-hood and motherhood. It makes "examinations" unprecessor. inations" unnecessary. Houest dealers do not suggest substitutes for a little added profit to be realized thereon. "I had suffered untold misery for years with ovarian trouble, an exhausting drain, constipation, painful periods and other annoying troubles," writes Mrs. Annie Janes, of No. 27 Seventh Street, Memphis, Shelby Co., Tenn. "Thank God, my health has been fully restored and I can gladly say I am a well woman to-day. I used six bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and was completely cured."
