The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

It is only now and then that a man learns something, but he forgets the whole day long. Our memory is like a sieve that with time and use holds less and less.

How long is it since you have "visited school"?

I have always believed that it is every mother's bounden duty to visit, at least once a term, the school where her children are spending almost half their waking hours. Lately I have been convinced that it would be a mighty good thing if others besides mothers "visited school" once in a while.

For what purpose, you ask? Well, partly for the pleasure of the memory and associations which such an expedition would arouse. But more for the interesting and instructive purpose of discovering how little we really know after all, how much more than we, even the little pig-tailed and freckled-faced boys and girls know.

Perhaps you think I am overstating that. If you do, it is all the more reason you should accept my invitation some day. Believe me, no group of college professors will make you more aware of your colossal ignorance than a class of grammar school youngsters reciting their freshly learned lessons.

Say the class is in geography and they are going over the capitals and principal cities of the various countries. How often do you know the answer before it is given? Unless you are over fifty, and then you are a little rusty, you really learned things in geography, you will probably be amazed to find how little you know.

Not long ago I went to an evening party where the business surprised us by substituting a geographical game for the conventional entertainment. There were half a dozen questions to answer, such as the capitals of all the countries, questions which should have been comparatively simple to all of us, but I assure you there was no trouble in selecting the wrong answer.

Don't think this is all just talk, but some day when you have a chance, try "visiting school." I am sure you'll learn quite as much as the scholars, and your lesson will be about that most important of all subjects—yourself.

ST. GEORGE'S SOCIETY AT CHURCH

The members of St. George's Society attended divine service in St. Paul's church last evening, where the pastor, Rev. E. B. Hooper, who is also chaplain of the society, preached a very eloquent sermon on the loyalty of the British people to God and country. The sermon was fully choral and the special hymns were well rendered by the choir.

The society assembled at their rooms at 6:30 with a large number of members present and, in charge of the marshals, banners, marched to St. Paul's church, of which their chaplain, Rev. E. B. Hooper, is pastor. The service commenced with a professional, Unifant the Empire's Standard, the full choir proceeding down the north aisle and up the nave, preceded by a chorister carrying the society's banner, which during the service occupied a place in the transept.

The service was fully choral, being intoned by Rev. Mr. Hooper with special lessons and psalms. The anthem was Hymn 175, arranged in parts, with the refrain after each verse, O Lord Stretch Forth Thy Mighty Hand, and Guard and Bless Our Fatherland.

Hymn 170, Christ is Risen, was sung, and also the special hymn for St. George's day.

"We will not cease from battle, We will not sheathe the sword; St. George, St. George for England And England for the Lord." Then part of the National Anthem was sung.

The society marched back to the rooms when votes of thanks to St. Paul's church and the chaplain were passed.

His Worship Mayor Frink, president of the society, was accompanied to the church by James Jack, vice-president of St. Andrew's Society.

Rev. Mr. Hooper took his text from Deuteronomy, xxviii.—1, 2. "The Lord thy God shall set thee on high above all nations of the earth, if thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God."

Diner—I say, waiter! Remove this cheese, quickly. Waiter—It's all right, sir? Diner—Oh, quite all right; but it's eating my bread.

La MARQUISE de FONTENOY

Death of Once Famous Beauty—The Romance of the Duke of Ailsa

(Copyright, 1912, by the Brentwood Company)

Lady Hermione Kennedy, after a life in the United States where she has many friends, has just been obliged, owing to the death of her mother, to offer famous beauty, to sail for Europe, where she will begin the task of consoling her father, Lord Alexander Kennedy, who was one of the most dashing officers of the British army. Lady Hermione was, I believe, born in Cairo, of parents who were renowned for their good looks.

It would be difficult to conceive of a greater contrast than existed in their younger days between the father, Lord Alexander Kennedy, the present and the late Marquis de Fontenoy, whereas Alexander possessed the perfection of easy good breeding, and had plenty to say for himself, was the life and soul of all social gatherings that he attended, and was famed as a raconteur, the marquis was, in many respects, almost incredibly shy, comically so, in fact.

This shyness, which one finds in so many Britons of ancient race, led to many awkward contrivances, some of them owing to the difference between the pronunciation of his name and the way it is spelled, and his backwardness in asserting his own identity. "Ailsa," as he called his own identity, "Ailsa," as he called his own identity, "Ailsa," as he called his own identity.

Amusing misunderstandings result from these peculiar pronunciations. For instance, the late Lady Egerton of Tatton gave a ball at her house in St. James' square. While talking to her guests, she noticed a quiet looking young man, who behaved as though he were a stranger, whatever to make himself conspicuous. Not recognizing her modest guest, she walked up to him and asked, "My name is Castles," he replied, "Castles! Castles!" exclaimed Lady Egerton, "I know nobody of that name."

He bowed, without saying another word, left the room and the house. The next morning, he enclosed his card of invitation, with his compliments, to Lady Egerton. She was overwhelmed with confusion at this discourteous reminder of the fact, which she had momentarily overlooked, that she was the hostess of the evening.

There is still another peculiarity of spelling to be mentioned in connection with the Ailsa family. The ancestral home, the Castle of Ailsa, in Ayrshire, is named "Castles," with the accent on the second syllable.

Romantic Meeting.—At Culzean Castle the present Marquis and his wife, Mrs. Isabella MacMaster. They are a very happy couple. Their acquaintance is a rather romantic fashion, more suitable, it would seem, to the pages of a work of fiction, than an event in real life.

After the death of his first wife, Evelyn, the lovely daughter of Lord Barnard, in 1888, Lord Ailsa went to India for rest and distraction. On his return journey, as he was about to embark, his friend, the Governor of Bombay, requested him to show some ordinary formal courtesy to a fellow passenger, a young girl, who was traveling under the captain's charge, in the second-class cabin. She was the daughter of a Scotch gardener named MacMaster, who had gone out to India to give technical advice as to the management of a tea plantation, and who by his fine skill and sterling character had secured for himself a position of trust on his employer's estate. He had sent some of his family to Scotland, and she soon went to Scotland for her daughter to come out and keep house for him, at Kamsari, in the northwest provinces. The girl had joined her father, had cooperated with him in his work, with all her heart, and had striven to fit herself for the whole of her life to the work which she had been called.

But suddenly her father died, a victim of one of those swift illnesses that are so common in India, and the girl was on her way back to Scotland. Lord Ailsa, on his way to India, had the intention of obeying his friend's wish that he should be courteous to her. He opened his eyes, and, to his surprise, he found her looking at him with a look of intense interest. Before the vessel had come to anchor, he had accepted her to be his wife, and she had accepted him.

It was not until landing, however, that she discovered the position which she had taken on the thought of the responsible duties she would have to perform as a great lady in her old country, where formerly her status had been so different. However, she was not to be deterred. She soon won the affection and esteem of all around her by her charm of manner and her many accomplishments. She is one of the most popular hostesses in Ayrshire. The marriage was a singularly happy one. They have two children, a girl and a boy.

Lord Ailsa Castle occupies a magnificent position on the west coast of Scotland. Its walls and towers seem to form part of the basalt cliff on which it is erected. The present building dates from 1777, when the tenth Earl of Castles substituted it for the old house, that had been the home of the Kennedys since the fifteenth century. The castle stands high overlooking the sea, with the famous Ailsa Craig in the distance. The caves of Culzean, under the castle, have long been famed in fairy tradition, and are certainly a curious object of nature. It is popularly believed that these caves run all the way into the interior of the land and it is said that a pipe who had his way in among them, was heard by the country people, playing in some mysterious depths beneath the ground, several miles away from the sea shore.

Although Lord and Lady Ailsa give dinners at their London house, at Lancaster Gate, in the season, they find their greatest pleasure at their seaside castle. Lord Ailsa is a quiet man, a good husband, father and landlord. His chief interest lies in horticulture, in acclimatizing and improving the cultivation of flowers. He has been especially successful with the foxglove and narcissus, which during spring extend in golden glory over miles of his estate. For an exquisite sight, which people come far to see, the Culzean grounds being thrown open to the public. The family is traditionally descended from the ancient Earls of Carrick.

Daily Hints For the Cook

STUFFED POTATOES WITH CHEESE. Bake until soft five or six medium-sized potatoes and with a sharp knife cut directly in halves, carefully removing the cooked potato into a mixing bowl; now mash with a potato masher, and when free from lumps add a teaspoonful of butter, one teaspoonful of minced parsley, half a cupful of rich milk, one small cupful of grated cheese, and salt and pepper to taste; beat with a fork until light and creamy and heap into their own skins, dusting the tops with grated cheese, and return to the oven until crisp and brown on top. Serve very hot.

RICE CUPS. Prepare a thick custard by boiling a cupful of washed rice in slightly salted milk; cook until the rice is dry and tender, stirring in one well-beaten egg, a scant tablespoonful of sugar, a few drops of vanilla extract and two tablespoonfuls of cream; beat until light and pour into shallow china cups, placing in the refrigerator to become firm; when cold unmold with a sharp spoon remove a portion of the rice from the center of each cup, filling the depression with a little of the syrup, cover the tops with powdered macaroni crumbs, and after arranging on a baking sheet run into a hot oven for about five minutes; serve with thick cream.

REV. HAROLD T. ROE AT EVERY DAY CLUB

Happiness, which he described as life's greatest treasure, was the theme of an exceptionally fine address by Rev. Harold Roe at the Every Day Club last evening. The happiness, he pointed out, is within and consists in a right estimate of the things we possess. The various elements which make for unhappiness, including worry, temper, a fault-finding spirit, envy, dependency and others were discussed in an entertaining way, with humorous illustrations; and this was followed by a very strong and earnest presentation of the case for cheerfulness and a loving and helpful spirit. The home, he pointed out, should always be a place of happiness, and the supreme need was an unflinching trust in God, as One both willing and able to care for His children. It was a cheering and a cheerful message Mr. Roe gave to the large audience which heard him, and his ability to pass from a humorous review of the lighter aspects of life to an impressive and eloquent presentation of its more serious problems made the address all the more interesting. The musical programme included a quartette by members of Carmichael street church choir and solo by Miss Nobles and Mr. Brindle.

Ladies, Special Attention

Now that the moving season is here again, you are no doubt giving the stove question some consideration. First you will have to decide whether it will pay to move the old stove that is so nearly burned out, and that you have had so much trouble in getting repairs for, or whether you will buy a new range.

Second when you have decided that you are going to buy a new range, then you will have to decide just what range you are going to buy and why. If you will kindly watch this space, we will solve that difficult problem for you in the next few issues.

YARMOUTH MAN MURDERED (Yarmouth Light) Lengthy accounts of the murder at Mora, Minn., of R. L. Winters, 45 years old, have been received at the office. The tragedy occurred on March 17, and was perpetrated by a 16-year-old degenerate who shot him in cold blood and then robbed the body. The deceased occupied a cabin near Mora and was unharmed. This was entered by young Thomas in the absence of the owner, but who returned when the place was being looted. It was then that the boy committed the deed. In 1908, a native of Yarmouth Co., and leaves a sister and a brother. The murderer later gave himself up and gave a 6000 word confession and life history; how he had read dime novels and wanted to be a bandit. He was sentenced to life in a reformatory, as capital punishment was abolished in Minnesota.
