Frank obediently went to the assistance of his pretty, vivacious little tyrant, and soon the heavy cover was lifted off the huge hox, a mass of pink-and-pearl-tinted tissue paper put aside, disclosing innumerable big and little packages, carefully done up in perfumed silver paper.

"Whew! We are stylish, that's a fact," laughed Aldyn merrily as Neelie dived imnetuously into the contents of a bos; "well, puss, I must be cff!"

So she struggled into the various garments of the fashionable outlie with precipitate haste Frank must be the first to see and admire her in the tunning new-decorations!

"There!" she cried exultingly, rosy with triumph and exertion, as her dimpled fingers deftly conquered the last obdurate button, and gave a final ecquettish twist to the crowning bow of rose-pink satin and soft lace at the round white throat, "there, sir, what do you think of me?"

Frank looked at the lovely little apparition of frivolous beauty in fashionable attire, in wide eyed admiration. From the tips of her pearl-gray satia boots to the topnost flower of the airy superstructure she called a bonnet, she made a faultless picture of youthful loveliness, faultlessly attired. His careworn face lighted up with genuine pleasure. How beautiful and care-free and ight-hearted she was! God grant that no shadow of trouble come near her! while dict she knew was trembling on his lips.

"Well?" she cried, a little wrinkle of impatience beginning to break the smooth curve of the perfect cyebrows, "don't stand key. Tell me what you think of my clothes, you trying boy!"

heart," laughed Aldyn, with assumed carelessness, "it merely occurred to me, as I took in the dainty richness of your general makeup, that it was a pity you did not have a husband to correspond with your new finery-that is all."

The moment the words were uttered Aldyn would have given much to recall them. He was sorry and ashamed; but he was not prepared for their effect on his thoughtless, mercurial, but deeply sensitive, young wife. She stared at him a moment with the wide-eyed astonishment of a petted and frolicome child, who suffers a sudden and unlooked for rebuff at the hand of its best beloved friend. Then a swift change ditted across the lovely, piquant face; a burning scarlet surged into the dimpled cheeks and mounted to the roots of the fluffy dark hair piled artistically above the low, The moment the words were uttered fy dark hair piled artistically above the low, sweet brow. THE LAUNDRESS' LAMENT.

Bless my heart! Why was I ever born?
Toiling and moiling from morning till night, and never a rest! If man was made to mourn, what was a laundress made forcertainly not to sing. My hands are nearly charred off working in filthy suds, washing other people's clothes, and other people's floors. No wonder soapmakers give prizes with their soaps. Those who use some of the soaps deserve prizes. I would rather do without the prizes and have a whole skin. And as to the mistress' part of the bargain—imagine rubbing ten dollars' the bargain—imagine rubbing ten worth into the value of five dollars, getting a fifty-cent prize for doing it? It pay for it. But I cannot laugh at my hands. Well, well, I suppose what car be cured must be endured.
