CAUSED DISASTER Conflicting Evidence in Empr Inquiry-Captain Kendall Says Storstad Changed Her Course

EACH SAYS OTHER

IEY LATER

Quebec, June 16-Evidence amplify known contentions in regard to the of the disaster to the Empress of at Father Point in the St. Law-m May 29 was brought out at toning session of the investigating commission, of which Lord the British house of peers, is man. So far, the main arguments airman. So far, the main arguments Captain Kendall of the Empress that e was stationary when rammed by the ollier Storstad; and of the owners of he collier that the Empress placed her-elf in front of their vessel, which in-lisputably had the right of way, were nly emphasized. Captain Kendall was the stand for several hours and gave ly emphasized. Captain Kendall was the stand for several hours and gave straightforward account of the events the terrible morning, along the lines his testimony at the Rimouski in-

ary. Questioned by Lord Mersey as to why stopped his ship when he had turned s green light to that of the Storstad, conformity with navigation rules, he imed he took the step as a safeguard-g measure owing to the fog. He could t be got by the lawyer for the Stor-td, to admit that his boat could have fited in front of the Storstad, unless collier had changed her course after e fog hid her from him, which con-gency he was of the opinion had taken the the collier had not changed her That the collier had not changed her irse after first sighting the Empress, ugh abortive attempts had been made port her helm after she had been wed down and that the Empress was ssing her bow, were the principle nts arising from the testimony of fred Tuftenes, the first officer of the pristad, who was examined during the zeroon.

witness also repeated the story

The witness also repeated the story at the Empress sailors refused to go ck in boats to carry on rescue work fer once reaching the Storstad. Mr. Haight supplemented the evidence Mr. Tuftenes, at the request of Lord ersey, by giving as his explanation of e disaster a belief that the big liner ought she could cross the bows of the we going-collier, that her helm was dered ported by one officer and star-arded by another, a suggested con-sion of orders which Captain Kendall lignantly repudiated. No agreement could be secured from testimony of the two witnesses heard lay as to the whistles blown by the seels, though Lord Mersey discovered en examining the Storstad's first offi-that he had blown a signal indi-ing that the collier was stopped and i immediately afterwards given an er to go slow ahead.

though he knew a collision to be table when the Storstad came at im in the fog, it was not till after it d occurred that the order to close the tertight bulkheads was given, by lich time three compartments had been ed to the sea.
