

In all the youthful sports to mix with glee,
With souls from ev'ry wayward passion free.

IV.

Like transient shadows, fleet those things we prize,
And for ev'ning finishes the last.
Winter returns; but when old age comes on,
Our spring of life can then return
no more;

Now blooms the rose, to-morrow it is gone,
And foaming billows waste the rocky shore.
Soon from this care-craz'd world
we're call'd away,
Whose pleasures no substantial bliss contain;
And soar to realms of everlasting day,
Where dove ey'd peace, content,
and every virtue reign.
