The Big Whistle.

I boarded the train at midnight. In the darkness and the rain, And deeply bowed the engine, And onward sped the train; Ah! what a wondrous sight— The sparks to windward sped— The fiery breath of the monster Of steam and steel ahead.

Anon we neared the highway, And the hollow of the night Was stirred by the voice of the demon, And I shuddered in affright. Anon we neared the village, And the whistle's terrible roar Proclaimed the power of the engine, And the speed at which we tore.

With a steed so strong and mighty, (Conductor said, "Old No. 4") I knew that we were flying A hundred miles an hour! And I grasped the seat before me, And braced my feet for a crash, That while at crossroads howling In our mad, impetuous dash.

I clinched my teeth at the danger, And my heart like a plummet dropped; When, after an hour of terror, The train at a station stopped. Then I found to my consternation, That only ten miles we had gone— The demon, a "pony" engine With a great, big whistle on!

The steam at that whistle wasted, Might have yielded far more speed; A man's imagination Is an easy thing to mislead; And there are engines human Who are blowing too much whistle, And showing too little man.

A SPECTRE HELMSMAN.

In the summer of 1839 the ship Vulcan, under the command of Capt. Isaac Johnson, was on her homeward bound passage from the Indies with half a cargo of tea, and she stopped at Cape Negro, on the coast of Benguela, after a lot of ivory to make up her hold.

Having gone on shore at the Cape, the captain learned from the native contractor, that he would have to go some fifteen miles up the Cannibal's river, as the elephant hunters had all the boats further up in the country, so that, consequently, they had not been enabled to bring the ivory down.

Capt. Johnson was somewhat disappointed at this cause of delay, but without waiting to find useless fault, he determined to man his own boat and proceed at once up the river. It required four trips to bring all the ivory down, but as they were so tired, the task was accomplished in four days.

On the last trip, the captain went himself, leaving the first mate in charge of the ship, and on arriving at the small village where the ivory was stored, he was not a little surprised to find that nearly all the miserable natives were deserted. Several times Captain Johnson enquired the meaning of this, but the natives were either unable or unwilling to give any plain answer, and it was not until the last of the trucks had been conveyed to the boats and the natives had been remunerated for their labor, that the least clue could be obtained as to the cause of this strange desertion, and then for the first time the captain received the startling intelligence that the cholera was sweeping down the river!

As soon as this fact became known to the seamen, they huddled wildly into their boats, as though the fearful death angel was at their heels, and silently, yet with powerful strokes, they pulled down the fatal stream.

At length they reached their ship, and though they breathed somewhat more freely as they trod their own deck, yet each countenance bore the stamp of deep fear. The ivory was soon got on board, and with all haste, if their feelings suffered not under way, it was nearly night when the ship got off, and with a good breeze from the northward and eastward, she stood well on her course.

On the next morning, shortly after breakfast, and while the crew had begun to think there was no occasion for further fear, a curious rumour named Walter Addison was taken suddenly sick.

Young Addison was the favorite both of the officers and the crew, and as it was reported that he was thus ill, a general consternation seized upon all hands.

The young man felt at first a giddiness and a sickly chill, and in the course of two hours he sank into an alarming debility, the countenance assuming a deadly paleness, and his skin bearing all the appearance of a corpse. Poor Addison suffered until noon, and then the startling announcement went through the ship that he was dead.

This was the first, but who would be the next?

A panic had seized upon the men; the children were with them, and no dare remove the form of their shipmate from his berth. Night approached, and with it came an almost dead calm, but the corpse was still in the forecastle, nor did the men dare to go thither. The captain urged that the longer presence of the body would breed more dangerous contagion, but the only answer he received was a mournful shake of the heads about him.

At length, finding that all arguments were useless, he turned to his mate and asked him if he would assist him in throwing the body of the dead man overboard.

The mate at first hesitated, but in a moment he signified his consent, and together he and the captain went into the forecastle.

They dared not remain long enough with the body to row it up, nor could they attach to it a sinking weight, but throwing over it a single blanket they managed to get it upon deck and lay it upon the bulwark of the starboard bow. A moment Capt. Johnson hesitated—he opened his eyes, breathed a prayer for the soul of the departed, and then, while a shudder ran over his frame, he let the cold form of young Walter Addison slide into the blue water.

Instantly he cast his eyes over the side as the dead was done, and by the pale phosphorescent light he

Hunting For Lost Mama.

Little Tot Who Cannot Understand that Mama is Gone Forever.

The sorrowful songs have been sung, the sad words have been uttered, all that love and tenderness could suggest has been done for the wife and mother calmly resting in her satin-lined coffin under masses of beautiful flowers.

The mourners have gone out with aching hearts and tear dimmed eyes. The hearse moves slowly away and the kindly neighbor women left in charge of the house go about putting things in order and speaking in an undertone, as well as they can, of the death, although the one it has claimed has been carried forth. There is still that indefinable something in the deserted rooms that tells of the dead visitor.

Suddenly the door of an upper room opens and a sweet, childish voice says pleadingly:

"I want my mama. I'm going to find my mama."

"No, no dear," says the nurse, with a suggestion of tears in her voice, while she furtively wipes her eyes; "come with me, like a good little girl."

"No, I want my mama. I have not seen my own mama for two, free—oh, most four days. I'm going to find my mama."

"But, baby, dear mama isn't—she isn't—here."

"Where is my mama then? She is here to you. She's down in her own pretty room. I'm going to hunt for my mama. Oh, mama! Baby wants you!"

In all this world of sadness and sorrow there is something more sad, and anything more pitiful than the pleading, wondering cry of a little child too simple to understand the mystery of death, and yet dimly comprehending that a change of some kind has taken place? Is there anything that touches the heart more deeply than to answer the pleading, pitiful questions: "Where is mama? Why don't she come? She has gone away where? Won't she kiss me good night any more? Can't I go up to heaven and see her?"

"The eyes of the little questioner open wide and there is a perplexed and satisfied look on her face, saying plainly that she does not understand what you mean by saying that 'mama is gone'; that 'God took her'; that she is 'up in heaven now.'"

You try tearfully to make it plain to the child and have her understand that she will see mama again some time, but again the little voice says with pitiful petulance:

"But I want mama now, and I am going to hunt until I find her."

What a sorrowful, disappointing search it is! It ends in tears and heartache, and it is long before even children understand that mama will come no more to the little ones calling for her. Everything is full of touches and suggestions of the mother who is gone. There are things that make her seem so real, so near. And so the baby goes hunting for mama. May all such sorrowful little ones find their best mama in the heavenly land.—Detroit Free Press.

Hall's Hair Renewer is free from alcohol and does not injure the skin. It is scientifically prepared, and will restore grey hair to its original color.

Now they spell it Boring. Is this dropping of the "B" a concession to the impatient Britishers? An explanation from Mr. Boring is in order.—Chicago Herald.

By a very ingenious and original process, Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., of Lowell, Mass., are enabled to extract the essential properties of the materials used in the manufacture of the most successful preparations of Sarsaparilla, thus securing a purity and strength that can be obtained in no other way.

The population of Fredericton is at present between seventy-two and seventy-three hundred, as prepared for the statistical department at Ottawa.

SHILO'S CATARRH REMEDY. A marvelous cure for Catarrh, Diphtheria, Canker mouth and Headache. With each bottle there is a large leaflet explaining the most successful treatment of these complaints without extra charge. Price 50c. Sold by A. MASA DIXON, Sackville, N. B.

The noon meetings of the week of prayer were held in the association rooms. The attendance was very good. Considerable interest was manifested. A well known young man expressed the opinion, as he looked over one of the gatherings, that there would be forty women to every man in heaven.—The Methodist.

The irreverent editor of the Chatam World thus comments on the above: We men will be at a big party there, but it will be a cold when the ugliest of us gets left at a tea party.

Keep Off the Chaps. Wet watery weather causes chapped hands, sore throat, croup, pain in the chest, swellings, etc., which a certain cure exists in Hays' Yellow Oil, the best expeller for internal or external use. A discussion having been started as to the effect of Dr. Koch's discovery on the business of life insurance, the views of a number of English experts on the subject were sought and have been given to the public. These have particular reference to a statement circulated to a Brooklyn physician, that life insurance companies would have to revise their tables of mortality in consequence of Dr. Koch's lymph. It has been pointed out that the lymph has yet to be proved capable of curing, or even materially alleviating the sufferings of those affected with tuberculosis. Even if it should achieve this much desired result the fact remains, that the mortality from consumption of assured lives is not so large as is popularly supposed. The diagnosis of the disease, even in its early stages, is so well known that few cases should escape the eye of a competent medical man, and while it is a fact that consumption may be contracted at any time, the seeds of the disease are more frequently sown in early life. It would be a grand thing, indeed, for humanity, were the Brooklyn doctor's statement to come true.

Canada is a great country for disappearance. Rich Englishmen go there and disappear, while Americans disappear and go there.—Chicago Herald.

A Cash Prize. The proprietors of Burdock Blood Bitters will give a prize of Five Dollars for the discoverer and best essay, (not to exceed 100 words), upon the merits of B. B. They will also pay $1 each for four essays they may select and publish. No restrictions. Try your skill, and address:

About Advertising.

Some Hints Which May be Useful to Our Advertising Patrons.

Advertising is a felicitous modern invention, answering to the calls of modern methods of doing business. Even blunders have achieved vastly more through its potent agency than far-sighted calculation has succeeded in doing without.—T. H. Cahill.

The man who went out to milk and sat down on a boulder in the middle of a pasture and waited for the cow to back up to him, was the eldest brother of a man who kept store and did not advertise, because he reasoned that the purchasing public would back up to his place when it wanted something.—Ex.

It is safe to say that anything which has real merit; for which there is a need or want, or of which a want can be created, and which sells at a reasonable price, can be profitably advertised in the newspapers.—Ayer.

In any just view of a quarter of a century of journalistic work the most prominent feature, and one giving great satisfaction to respectable publishers, is that printing a newspaper has become recognized as a business and not a charity.—Owen Scott.

The great art of printing advertisements is the finding out a proper method to catch the reader's eye; without a good thing may pass over unobserved, or be lost among commissions of bankrupts.—Addison.

Medical Hints. The quickest, surest and best remedy to rheumatism, neuralgia, sore throat, soreness and lameness, is Hays' Yellow Oil. It quickly cures sprains, bruises, burns, frostbites, chilblains, etc. For croup, colds, quinsy, etc., take 10 to 20 drops on sugar, and apply the oil externally also, when immediate relief will result.

It is reported that the Ogilvie Milling Company has sold out to an English syndicate two-thirds interest for $2,000,000. The Ogilvie retaining the other third, and W. W. Ogilvie remaining as manager for not less than three years. The Keweenaw Milling Company has not sold out to the syndicate.

The Key Stone. REGULAR action of the bowels is the key stone of health. The use of Dr. B. B. B. insures it and cures constipation, dyspepsia, etc.

Miss F. Williams, 445 Bloor St. Toronto, writes: "I have used your blood purifier, Bitters for constipation and pain in the head with great success. I improved from the second dose."

A somewhat modest New York lawyer says that only once in his life has he really been proud. "The first time was years ago in court. I'd been admitted, and had had charge of the preparation of an important suit. The jury brought in a verdict for our side and I felt happy. But after I'd collected the papers and looks a-d was going out, my chief, who was one of the lights of the bar in those days, put his hand on my shoulder, and said: 'You prepared that case well, my boy; if it hadn't been for you, we'd have been beaten.' And I knew it was so, for he'd come back from Washington only that morning and had had to depend entirely on my work. And the second time I felt proud was when my married sister came into my library early one afternoon, and said in a half-whisper: 'It's a boy.' Everyone will admit that on the latter occasion, at least, his self-congratulations were justified.—Ex.

Read These Lines. 1 to 2 bottles of B. B. B. will cure Headache. 1 to 2 bottles of B. B. B. will cure Biliousness. 1 to 4 bottles of B. B. B. will cure Constipation. 1 to 4 bottles of B. B. B. will cure Dyspepsia. 1 to 6 bottles of B. B. B. will cure Bad Blood. 1 to 6 bottles of B. B. B. will cure Scrofula. In any case relief will be had from the first few doses.

The production of paper in the entire world is estimated to be 3,000,000,000 pounds per year. There are 884 paper mills, and 1106 paper machines in the United States. Germany has 800 mills, and 891 machines; France 429 mills and 525 machines; England 351 mills and 541 machines; Scotland 69 mills and 98 machines; Ireland 13 mills and 13 machines; Russia 123 mills and 137 machines, and Austria 220 mills and 270 machines.
