REV. XXII. I. BY MATTIE WINFIELD TORREY.

The streets of the city are cooled by its flowing;
The gold and the jewels, so wondrous to see.

O, throne of the Lamb, with its glory un-taken up, when it w. Lucius Fernleigh have spoken!

O, trees He hath planted for bealing and rest!

Shine in on our vision, and give us a token
To comfort the heart that is sore and oppressed.

Lucius Ferniens was no longer of them. Ferniens point, at this at of resigning his he been permitty have been well-this summary expenses.

We struggle and faint with desire to was on that he would be at home on the following day, whereupon it was voted to adjourn the meeting to the next evening. Fernleigh opposed the motion, but was alone in his opposition, and his vote went for nothing.

On the next day came intelligence of the railroad horror! Men & women had been killed! Lacius Fernleigh was fike one distracted. He believed his wife had been on the train, homeward bound. He telegraphed to the station nearest the scene of the disaster and waited in agony of suspense

And yield for the nations a fruitage of love.

O. clearer than crystal that stream floweth ever;

O. clearer than crystal that stream floweth ever;

The glow and the glory that span it for ever;

Proceed from the source that no darkness can hide.

O. River of Liffe! on thy bosom upheaving, The hope of the nations, the joy of the world!

Look upward, ye doubting; O see, ye despairing,

The banner of God and His stendard unfurled.

That evening he attended the meeting again, and Edgar Bishop came in while the committee was in session. The lawyer was late because he had just arrived in town.

He had met with an accident on the way and had been delayed. There was a vivid mark upon his face, as of a burn, and his left arm was in a sling. Fernleigh did not greet him cheerfully as of old. The memory of the letter rankled in his bosom, and made him wroth.
