Bay D'Espoir Development.*BIG THINGS FORESHADOWED.

From a casual observation of operations at Bay D'Espoir and Bay D'Espoir on the South Coast during the last two or three months, it seems quite probable that the great project, outlined by H. J. Crowe (the great promoter) in the St. John's Daily Star, January, 1921 is fast nearing maturity.

Surveyors, engineers and forest rangers, and about a hundred men from the different settlements in that neighbourhood have been engaged in this work, so that a very extensive survey and examination of water power and pulp wood have been in progress, and the outlook for big developments in the near future of our forest resources are most encouraging; and one can almost venture to say already begun.

During the months of August and September, and early part of October this extensive examination and survey have entailed an expenditure in the vicinity of thirty thousand dollars. Moreover expenditure will probably continue this winter, also next spring and summer, all of which will be utilized as a commencement for the construction of pulp and paper mills larger even than Grand Falls Development. Mr. Crowe has been working on this great undertaking for the past ten years; entertaining very large outlay, and well deserves the hearty support of all who have the power and influence to encourage him in this great proposition he is working so hard to solve. Mr. Crowe's ability as a company promoter has been fully demonstrated by his past undertakings in our Dominion, particularly in the development of our forest resources, and as Lord Northcliffe said in a speech delivered after the opening of the Grand Falls Mills, "If it were not for Mr. Crowe the Grand Falls, Bishop Falls and Botwood industries would not be there to-day."

The one great need in our Dominion, to help it out in these distressing times is labour, and we have not the wherewithal to furnish that labour, owing chiefly to the non-development of the country's resources. The one great need to promote and develop these resources is capital. Mr. Carnegie was once asked: Which was the most important factor governing industries, "Brains, capital, or labour." To answer that question he put this one, "Which is the most important leg in a three-legged stool?" It was plainly seen, well we have the labour and the brains, but without the capital the whole thing tumbles. It is with eager expectation that the proposed industry in Bay D'Espoir is looked forward to, as our people are in many cases in distressing circumstances. It is a demonstrated fact that the fishery is by no means adequate to supply the wants of the growing population, besides being so uncertain, and something needs to be done if the young men and young women of our country are to be kept from migrating to some other country which offers better prospects for the bettering of their conditions. The labour paid by Mr. Crowe this past month or two has

Parson Hangs Murderer

Convicted of murder, Eugene Weeks was hanged by the Rev. Winifred B. Robb, Sheriff at Des Moines, United States, and the Rev. executioner was blessed by the man who stood on the brink of eternity. Mr. Robb resigned his pastorate some time ago because of the many things his office of Sheriff required him to do, and of which some of his congregation did not approve. He conducted all the last minute arrangements of the execution, and, as he slipped the hood on the head of the condemned man, the priest said: "God Bless You." Weeks came from Hartford, Conn., and he was one of the several young men convicted of the murder in connection with the death of a Des Moines grocer. The sheriff did not flinch at the execution, and when an incorrect adjustment of the rope permitted Weeks' feet to touch the ground, he seized the rope and helped the prisoner to ward to wrap it round a post so that the suffering of the man would not be prolonged. When Weeks had been declared to be dead, the sheriff walked out into another room where he knelt in prayer. The blessing which Weeks asked from his executioner was the only remark in which he showed any reverence on the day his life was ended. He had joked with everybody that morning, and at the time of the execution he had asked the sheriff to take him to the gallows early, as he said he wanted to tell "those sightseers" a few things. He was therefore on the scaffold a quarter of an hour before the time fixed for his execution.

Telling those present to come closer if they wanted to hear what he had to say, he said that another man had been convicted in connection with the same murder was not with him on the fatal night, and should therefore not be hanged. He added that he himself was innocent. "They won't hurt my feelings," he added, "when they hang me. It is nothing to dread. Up to the ere of the execution the Rev. sheriff continued to receive letters urging him not to proceed with the hanging. These were part of hundreds which he had received from churchmen all over the country asking him not to act as executioner. He stated that he took this duty that some of the letters were religious fanatics who tried to frighten him by saying he would burn everlastingly in hell. This is the first time in America that an ordained minister has acted as executioner.

Financial Crisis of 1857.

The close of the year 1857 was marked by a financial crisis, which had its origin in America, due to the over issue of paper money. In October, the Bank of England raised its rate of discount to 8 per cent, but the crash came notwithstanding. On the 27th the Bank of Liverpool suspended payment, and their example was followed by the Western Bank of Scotland. On Nov. 9, the Bank of England raised its rate to 10 per cent; the City of Glasgow Bank, and Messrs. Sanderson, Sandeman and Co. closed their doors on the 11th, and next day the Government was obliged to come to the rescue, and suspend the Bank Charter Act of 1844, thus enabling the Bank of England to increase its circulation by the issue of additional notes to the amount of £2,000,000 sterling. At the close of the day the reserve of the Bank had sunk to £251,000, but confidence was restored, though serious and widespread suffering had not been averted.

To shell and blanch chestnuts, cut a long rash on flat sides, put in an emollet pan, with a half teaspoon butter to each cup chestnuts. Shake over fire until butter melts, then let stand in oven for 5 minutes. The shells and skins may then be easily removed with a small knife.

International Law in Waste Basket.

For inconsistencies commend me to the Government of the United States. The "run chasers" belonging to Uncle Sam are cracking to him the international regulations in respect to the freedom of the seas by seizing vessels flying the British flag outside the three mile limit, and at the same time the vessels owned by the United States and operated by duly appointed representatives of that Government, are carrying liquor backward and forward on each voyage and are selling it to their patrons with the same abandon as was displayed before the name Volstead became a household word.

"If the United States is so eager," says the New York Times, "to seize whisky-bearing craft beyond the three mile limit why does it not begin with the United States Shipping Board steam gin mills, Mr. Lasker's floating islands of rum?"

However, there is a much more serious side to the situation, which unless adjusted might very well lead to alarming international complications. Quite recently the yacht Onward, flying the British flag and lying some ten or twelve miles off the Jersey coast, was set upon by one of Uncle Sam's prohibition navy. The Onward's captain warned them off when they attempted to board his vessel, and threatened to use fire arms if the U.S. officers persisted. Fortunately in this particular instance there was no real harm done, as the U. S. vessel's officers decided that under the circumstances they would leave the Onward alone. As to whether or not the Onward is a rum runner, there is at the moment no proof one way or the other, is beside the point. The pertinent question is whether or not the United States can remake international laws that have been for generations respected by all civilized countries.

In international law territorial waters are a belt of sea adjacent to their shores which states respect as being under their immediate territorial jurisdiction, subject only to a right of "innocent" passage through them by vessels of all nations. As to the breadth of this belt there has been some controversy, this being mainly in respect to fishing rights, but the three mile limit has been recognized and practiced by Great Britain and the United States since the close of the eighteenth century. This question had a bearing on the Behring Sea arbitration in which the United States was directly interested. This Court of Arbitration in 1893 found that Russia had never claimed or exercised exclusive jurisdiction over the Behring Sea outside territorial waters, that is to say the three mile limit; and that the United States had no further right than had Russia at the time of the cession of Alaska in 1867. It is interesting to note that the establishment of the three mile limit of territorial jurisdiction had originally to do with the cannon range of the period at which it was adopted, indicating that it is a venerable old law and still worthy of respect. However, all this does not deter a United States judge from throwing it all in the waste basket by giving a decision that the United States Government had the right to stop and search all vessels within the twelve mile limit. Just why that judge, who is apparently as well versed in such matters as the town pump, did not make it forty or four hundred is not stated. In international law one is as good as the other.—Saturday Night, Toronto.

Not Worth the Money.

The bans had been published for the first time in an English rural church. After the service the prospective groom went to the vicar and asked him if he could have his bans changed. "Of course," said the vicar, but with great surprise. "You are not married nor bound yet in any way. But why do you want them changed?" "Well, parson, it's just that I've been thinking it over and it seems to me I'd rather have her sister." "You can please yourself," replied the vicar coldly, "but of course new bans must be published." The groom-to-be looked anxious. "Ah, parson," he stammered, "I paid half a crown for putting up those bans. Will I have to give 'e another half-crown?" "Certainly," said the vicar brusquely, and prepared to go. "Ah," sighed the rural swain, and then with sudden determination, "Ah, well, I've been thinking it over and it seems to me I'd rather have her sister." "You can please yourself," replied the vicar coldly, "but of course new bans must be published."
