"I acknowledge that my father expressed a wish that I should marry you," coloring darkly, "always provided you were willing to accept me, and I"—slowly—"acceded to that wish."

"But why, why?" demands she, flashing round at him.

"I do not wonder at your question. It seems impossible there should be a reason," replies he coldly; "for ever since the first hour we met you have treated me with uniform unfriendliness, I had almost said discourtesy."

"There is a reason, nevertheless," says she hotly. She has come a step or two nearer to him, and her large. strous eyes, uplifted, seem to look deflance into his. "Your reason I can fathom—but your father's—that, I conless, puzzles me. Why should he, whose god is money, choose the penniless daughter of the brother he defrauded, 'Defrauded!" interrupts Seaton with 'Call it what you will," with an expressive gesture of her hand, "under-take his defense, too; but the fact remains that the iniquitous deed that gave to your father what should have been ours was undoubtedly drawn up by my uncle. I have heard all about

She is as pale as death, and the hands that cling to the back of the chair near her are trembling. But her lips are firm and her eyes flashing. It occurs to Seaton, gazing at her in breathless silence, that if she could have exterminated him then and there by a look

I know very little of the true facts of the case, and you will pardon my saying that I think you know as litle, all your information being from the man who believed himself wronged."

Was it mere fancy, then? Is that how it seems to you? Is it right that an elder son should be thrust out of his place and the younger given all?

I have already said that I think that unjust; but who shall say it was father who was unduly influenced old man, whose name is a synonym for hatred, malice and uncharitableness? That will, in my estimation, should not have been allowed to stand; there I blame my father. Had it been in my making the distance in 6:50. The best power I would have restored the property to you and yours long since; but, as you see, I can do nothing—yet. In time," he pauses and regards her earnestly, "I may be able to do so."

"You would restore me my own as a gift! Do you think I would accept it at your hands? Not that nor anything says she with cold contempt. You hardly know me. What is mine by right of law, I would hold against what the law forbids me. I will take from no man-and from you, of

"Pray put that marriage out of your head," says he slowly. "You have taken it too seriously. I assure you I would not marry you now if you were as willing as you are unwilling. I can hardly put it stronger."

"That fact does not alter the past; and of that alone I complain. The future is in my hands," haughtily, "not yours. I remember that you would have agreed to your father's proposal; that is enough. You were willing to marry me—he said so: and I tell you." marry me—he said so; and I tell you," lifting once again her lovely condemnatory eyes to his, "that was the act of

"You have called me a coward once before," he reminds her with a peculiar smile. "There is no occasion to repeat that insult. I have not forgotten it." "Why should I not repeat it? Why should I not tell you now, once for all?" says she, "what I think of you?

Do you know," drawing closer in a heavy tired way, as if all the youth and spirit has gone out of her, "that it a hundred times. Your father hard-I did not suspect you of it? VANDERBILT SMASHED RECORD. Ormonde, Fla., Jan. 30. - Fifty miles with four turns, in 40 minutes and 49 4-5 seconds was the record made in the Ormonde-Dayton beach course to-day by W. K. Vanderbilt, jun. The event was for the American Automobile Association championship at that distance, open to all. The pace figures out 73½ miles an hour, the best record ever made in America and almost as good as any straight-away record for that distance in the world. In this stake, going at a good speed. In the ten-mile invitation race, open to gentlemen amateurs only, Mr. Vanderbilt again smashed all previous records, previous record was made by Barney Oldfield, at Denver, last year. The three motor cycle machines, which raced a mile yesterday, went ten miles straight-away today. G. H. Curtiss won with the record time of 8:54 2-5. Oscar Hedstrom and W. W. Austin came in second and third. Between the races scheduled for today. Barney Oldfield tried ten miles against time, but did not lower the record.
