> > "If non-Catholics are satisfied with a mere secular contract of marriage, we will not quarrel with them on the subject. We have neither the right nor the power to force the gifts of God upon them. But it is the right and the indis-pensable duty of the rulers of the Cathoc Church to prevent her children from taking part in any proceeding that con-flicts with their Catholic faith and degrades what they believe to be a sacra-ment instituted by our Lord Jesus Christ or the sanctification of the souls of men. t is deplorable that any Catholic should ssist at a ceremony which robs Christian marriage of its sacramental character, thereby bringing it down to the level of a market bargain, and making it rescindable, thus opening wide the door for adulterous concubinage. By such an act he dishonors the all-holy Redeemer of he dishonors the all-holy Redeemer of the world, who is the author of every sacrament and of all grace. It is still more deplorable, and more heinously criminal before God and men, that a Catholic lady should not merely assist as spectator of such a scene, but should dress berself up as one of the actresses ress herself up as one of the actresse in the drama, and parade herself on the latform as one of the principal performers.

"Let not those who went to that louse of unbelief for the purpose of witnessing the spectacle try to excuse themselves from the charge of criminal participation on the ground that they took no part in the act, and desired only to amuse themselves, as they would at a theatre. Their voluntary presence at the scenic entertainment was of itself a participation in the act, and was manifestly an insult to the holy faith they profess. Whosever goes to a theatre to witness what he knows to be a performance offensive to his national feelings or the credit of his family is chargeable with impropriety, although he is merely a spec-tator. In fact, our code of criminal law ing into what they are certain is the rigidly maintains this principle of participation in crime by voluntarily assisting at the performance of the evil deed. We no-wise blame non-Catholics in this matter. They act in conformity with their conscience. But we do blame and condemn the weak-minded Catholic who knowingly and willingly belittles "the great sacrament," as St. Paul designates matrimony, and by so doing belittles Jesus Christ and His Holy Church. "There is another irregularity that sometimes is practised by lukewarm Uatholics. They take a fancy to entering non-Catholic churches in order to dead,' which all non-Catholics, as well as Catholics in these countries know and proclaim to be of no service to the dead. Here again we attribute no blame to those who through ignorance of the Christian religion disbelieve the revealed deatrings of paragraphy and intercessory. Christian religion disbelieve the revealed doctrines of purgatory and intercessory prayer and the communion of saints. We must, however, reprehend with all authority those Catholics who show so little respect for themselves and their religion as to participate in a performance of this kind, directly at variance with fundamental Christian dogmas. ment, there seems to be no reason why a church should be selected as the place of its celebration rather than the city hall or the opera house. Moreover, if mardiage is not a sacrament it is rescindable by the authority of the state, in like manner as every other worldly contract is subject to the civil power for the regulation of its conditions of validity, and consequently may be dissolved by the same power whensoever the gentlemen representing the state have found, or fancy they have found, sufficient cause for this dissolution.

"It is the blood of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, sealing the matrimonial contract that gives it inviolability and peremptorily excludes the state and the politicians from all power to lay unholy hands on it: (What God hath put together let no man put asunder.) Hence it is that in every country where the sacramental character of matrimony is ignored or denied the politicians of later times take the whole matter into
