An experienced camper recommends a sleeping bag made by folding a single colored blanket, doubling it length wise and sewing across one end and two-thirds the way up the long edges. A similar bag of cotton sheeting may be used inside the outer. In warm weather the latter may sometimes be used alone. The advantages of such protection against ants and other insects is obvious. An air pillow and cushion that can be inflated at pleasure are comfortable and light. Plates should be of wood and plentifully provided, to be thrown away after each meal. Canned provisions come in such variety that, if there is strength in the party to carry them, there can be a sufficient change of food. Out-of-or of the big building.
