

respect. I do so only as an example of the conclusions to which many years of observation of the impingement of the forces of modern life on professional duty have led some of our wisest heads. I will refer only to a few as follows :

“ No candidate shall be admitted to examination who refuses to make known, when so required by the President and censors, the nature and composition of any remedy he uses.”

“ That the practice of medical authors frequently advertising their own works in the non-medical journals, and especially with the addition of laudatory extracts from reviews, is not only derogatory to the authors themselves, but is also injurious to the higher interests of the profession.”

Again, “ No fellow, member, or licentiate of the college shall officiously, or under colour of a benevolent purpose, offer medical aid to, or prescribe for, any patient whom he knows to be under the care of another doctor.”

A further rule prescribes that no physician shall himself assume any special designation of therapeutic method, such as homœopath, electropath, hydropath, or countenance those who do so.

Again, “ A physician shall have no interest in a secret medicine, and that he shall always when called upon by the college disclose every part of the composition of his medicines.”

“ If it shall at any time hereafter appear, or be made known to the president or censors that any fellow or member of the college has obtained admission into the college or that any licentiate of the college has obtained the license of the college by fraud, false statement, or imposition, or that any fellow, member or licentiate has been guilty of any great crime or public immorality, or has acted in any respect in a dishonourable or unprofessional manner, or has violated any statute, by-law, or regulation of the college, relating to fellows, members, or licentiates, as the case may be, the president and censors may call the fellow, member, or licentiate so offending before them, and having investigated the case, may admonish or reprimand, or inflict a fine ; or if they deem the case of sufficient importance, may report the case to the college, and thereupon a
