fuch revenue officers as are either corruptly concerned in fmuggling or in collufive feizures, or wilfully and knowingly connive at them; and the permitting commodities feized to be fold for home confumption free of duty. Under this practice, every attempt made to fmuggle, mult of neceffity produce all the evil to the flate, which its fuccels could produce ; and the only queftion is, whether the imuggler or the cuftam house officer shall reap the benefit; for by the one or the other of them the commodity is with certainty brought into confumption, free of duty, whilst the fale thereof upon the fea coaft at the fame time, affords the means of covering; by permits, the fraudulent conveyance of vally greater quantities of fouggled goods than could be fo covered if those fales did not afford the pretence. It is therefore conceived, that the abolition of this practice, and the fale of all feizures for exportation only, under the ufual fecurities, is become effential to the fupport of our own colonies, under the load of duties with which the confumption of their produce in these kingdoms is burthened. . . bie an and grand all so

Every delay, arifing from the forms of the cuftom-houfe, and the limitations of the fpace in which bufinefs is required to be done, increases the opportunities, not only of defrauding the revenue by fnuggling, but robbing the importer by pilfering the commodity as which the duty is payable. In this view, as well as in many others, it
