

acquaintance with the subject would be beneficial to them. Having on one occasion to ask his congregation for an offering towards the support of a chaplain for the hospital and the jail, he spent an afternoon in the latter institution in order to learn something of it, and the result was he was able to tell his people on Sunday some things that were quite new, and apparently, instructing to them, as they had been to himself, and to obtain readily the contribution asked for. He thought that if the members of the Government could have been at the meeting to-night they would have felt their grant was well bestowed. He would also thank the city council for their grant, and would assure Mr. Neil that in lending his school house for this meeting, he was furthering a good work.
