CATHOLIC MAN ABROAD LAST NIGHT'S SUBJECT

Father Borgmann's Sermon in The Men's Retreat in St. Peter's Church

At the services last evening connected with the men's retreat at St. Peter's church, Rev. Henry Borgmann, C. S. R., delivered a practical and forceful sermon on "The Catholic Man Abroad," a companion discourse to that which he gave the previous evening on "The Catholic Man at Home." The night before the church was well filled with men, and the retreat thus far has been a distinct success. Tonight's subject was "The Catholic Man Abroad," and the speaker, Father Borgmann, spoke strongly on the necessity of the church having a strong force of laymen cherishing her interests and devoted to her prosperity, true-hearted sons of God interested in the development of the Catholic faith, and having a "Catholic heart and a Catholic head." "They try to tell me," said he, "that France has among 30,000,000 of her population, 20,000,000 Catholics—France a Catholic country? Why is it so? There's no truth in it. Who will tell us that with that number of Catholics in the proper sense of the word, there would have been driven from France 100,000 innocent, defenceless women, sisters of mercy and charity? Or Portugal, which they have said is a Catholic country, if there had been men there with true Catholic hearts, would they have permitted the slaughter of the nuns and sisters in their convents? The church wants Catholic laymen. Twenty-five years ago when I was at college I remember reading that a priest in France wrote that the women were faithful in their church duties, but that the men never went near the communion rail. What does this prove? What followed from this? Devotion in the form of men have been permitted to take the reins of government and the persecution of the church and her interests has resulted."

There was no necessity, said the speaker, of openly crying out to the world, shouting it to the four winds whenever one changed to wander. "I am a Catholic," the fact that one is a Catholic is a practical Catholic and took an interest in the affairs of the church was sufficient. He held that most of them that before anything else the church needed Catholic laymen and this was becoming more and more true. It was not must be conversant with the doctrines and the matters pertaining to the church. To families themselves with Catholic truths they should support Catholic papers.

Many men could be found, said Father Borgmann, who could easily enumerate the different baseball players, their records for a decade past, and do the same with prize fighters and prize horses, to familiarize themselves with something more beneficial, a knowledge of God's holy teachings—that was beyond most of them. He urged affiliation with fraternal societies, particularly insurance societies and fraternal societies, and the importance of the lack of interest among Catholic laymen in Europe was becoming more common all the time. It seemed to be finding a place as well in the United States, and it was a blessing from God, he thought, that a feeling of sympathy was being aroused towards the suffragettes, for they would better interest themselves in the doctrine of Christ in a country government than did the men. Twenty-five years ago had there been suffragettes proceeding with their work in France and Portugal, those countries would not have been lost to the church today.

The greatest need of the church from her early ages has been Catholic laymen, Father Borgmann urged the necessity of always manifesting an interest in Catholic matters, living up to the faith, and being ready to defend the church on all occasions.

A CHILD'S PRAYER
The driver of a Midland railway train, which was standing still at the time, was busy on the foot-plate oiling his engine. In doing this he slipped and fell between the lines. An express was just coming. Barely had he time to stretch himself full length in the six-foot way, with scarcely a possibility of escape, when whizzing past like a hurricane rushed the express. The strain was indescribable, but by the gracious preserving care of the One above, he rose up untouched, unhurt. Retaining home during the night he heard one of his children sobbing piteously. "Oh, daddy," she cried, as he inquired the cause of her distress, "I thought somebody came and told me you were going to be killed, and I got out of bed and prayed and prayed that God would not let you be hurt." To that simple, child-like, pathetic appeal the driver believes he owes his marvelous preservation from the terrible fate that had almost been his.

A PLEASING ENTERTAINMENT
An interesting entertainment was given by the Boy Scouts of St. James' church in their hall last evening. The first feature on the program was a western drama, "Mustang Bill," written by Scout Master Ingleton, of the Gernall street troop. The cast included: Guy Sevil, Harold Fowler, Pete Wilderson, Jack Timmons, Roy Thomas, Murray Nixon and Ronald Rubens. This was followed by a clever sketch detailing the adventures of a countryman searching for his son in St. John. Those taking part were: Rev. H. A. Cody, Jack Murray, Murray Nixon and Harry McDonald. The programme also included vocal solos by Miss Julia Dunham and recitations by Ralph Kee and R. J. Dibble.

When mending kid gloves use cotton instead of silk. The cotton is not so likely to cut the kid, and the mended corner is less conspicuous than when silk is used.

Rich Man—Would you love my daughter just as much as if she had no money?
Sutor—Why, certainly!
Rich Man—That's sufficient. I don't want any kids in this family.
