side of the long nursery.

There were babies, plump, rosy and good-natured, as all babies should be, and pale, fretful, puny little creatures, who looked as if they were already disgusted with the life upon which they had entered; black, blue, and gray-eyed babies, and babies with eyes of very little color at all. It would seem that the lady addressed, and who was desirous of obtaining one for adoption, would find no difficulty in suiting herself; but either she did not see what she was in search of, or was too bewildered by so many rival claims to be able to make any choice.

"Here is a very fine boy-baby," said the matron, pausing in front of a blackeyed fellow, who sat on the knee of its nurse, sucking its fat thumb. "Yes, but I want a girl, a blonde.

Some thing like this." As the matron glanced at the photograph that was handed her, which was that of a very lovely child of not more han two summers, she uttered an ex-

"We have a little girl in the hospital ward," said the matron, "who resembles this picture so strongly that I should think it was taken for her. Both parents are dead, and, so far as I can learn, there is no one to claim her."

The speaker led the way to a cheerful, sunny upper room, where on one of the little cots a beautiful child was sleeping. ince to the picture was very strong, and to the bereaved mother it almost like a revelation from

"I think I shall have something to say about that. Do you love Charlie?"

"Dearly."
"And you think he loves you?"

"I'm sure of it." "Then I see no reason why you two shouldn't marry.". Lilian opened her eyes widely.

"You don't think I ought to disobey long lost daughter, who often declares "that she has two papas, and does not "I've said nothing about your disknow which she loves best."

I have a daughter, just about your age, who will inherit all my wealth. Do you think you could be happy in a small, plainly-furnished house, with neither servants, fine dresses, or any of the beautiful things to which you have been accustomed all eur life ?"

The golden lashes drooped until they ay quiveringly upon the flushed cheeks. "If Charlie were there." Mr. Haven's face betrayed strange and strong emotion. "Twenty years ago," he said tremu ously, "lips just as sweet spoke to me nearly the same words. As God lives, your life shall not be blighted as hers

Mr. and Mrs. Howard were too much accustomed to the vagaries of their wealthy and eccentric neighbour, to be any way surprised at his appearance. He had frequently dined with them in ROUND MACHINE STEEL the same unceremonious fashion : his genial and kindly traits of character making him a great favorite with all the family.

Their after-dinner talk turning upon the improbability of a recently published story, Mr. Haven said:

"I will relate a story, as strange any that can be found in what is called fiction, and which is strictly true:

"Sixteen years ago yesterday, as it stands upon the records of a certain orphan asylum in a distant State, a lady, young, fair and wealthy, went there for the purpose of obtaining a child to take the place of one she had just lost. In one of the wards was a lovely little girl, whose parents had both been killed, as was supposed, in a railroad disaster, and who so strongly resembled her lost it at the first glance. She took it away with her, giving it her child's place and name, and her husband, who was absent at the time, has never once suspected that it was not the little one that he kissed at parting, and over whose grave the grass has been growing for many a year. Six months later the father of this child, who had recovered in a measure from the accident which had made him a cripple for life, called "She looks enough like you to be at the asylum to claim her, but only to
