IMMORALITY IN ENGLAND.

Even if we allow the Hanley brutality to be the invention of Mr. Greenwood brain, it is a melancholy fact, which cannot be denied, that in some parts of England, at the present day, exhibitions of savagery and gross immorality take place which are a disgrace to the en-lightened age in which we live. By the latest Liverpool papers we learn that the Borough gaol is not enough to ac-commodate the female prisoners who make it their almost constant home. Father Nugent, whose visit to Canada our readers may remember characterizes this class of women as incorrigible. All that can be done to reform them has been done, but without appreciable good results. In the manufacturing districts crimes of violence are on the increase. The barbarous practice of kicking, or "pursing," as it is called, prevails to a frightful eat at all through Lancashire and the greater part of Yorkshire. The Manchester Guardian lately published a record, avowedly imperfect, of assaults of this kind made by men—or beings in the discusse of men—on women for the disguise of men-on women for a period of less than two times, which gave period of less than two times, which gave a return of twenty one eases that came within the cognizance of the courts. But the brutal custom is not confined to men, it would seem, for of assaults of the same nature committed by men and women on men, there were, during the same period, no less than twenty. In some lastances, the suffers was absolutely kicked into a state of insensibility. One of the persons attacked in this manner was a man of eighty four years of age. A still more brutal case was that in A still more brutal case was that in which a woman and the infant she was nursing had to submit to the outrage.

Two men were found guilty of kicking one woman. One person died under the hand, will be sold cheap at this
