• Ogels on new album • BY MARK CAMPBELL • W First A COVER sporting a famous Nellie McClung quote and a rabid looking

animal, the debut album of the Sons of Freedom certainly looked unique. Fortunately, so was the music. The band bristled with raw energy lacking in many of today's socalled rock bands. Certainly a song called "Fuck the System" had given me cause for concern before I bought another band content to chant mindless cliches over lame music.

MUSIC Sons of Freedom Gump

Nothing could have been further from the truth. While the album was original and vibrant, it sagged at times into dense and plodding progressions that seemed to be heading nowhere. It was, however, a promising debut that made the band one worth watching. Yet, when I heard they had parted ways with their record company, I Some critics have had problems thought they were destined to join the other one album Canadian bands TITH A COVER sporting a that showed promise, but faded into

Last fall, the band was signed to Chrysalis in the US, and while that signing appears to be in jeopardy due to the recent buyout of the label. MCA Canada appears dedicated to developing this promising band. This second album, Gump, is an improvement in that the songs are, for the most part, shorter and less cluttered or heard the album. I feared this was than those on their debut album without sacrificing the raw power that characterized their debut.

When the band gels, as they do on the opening track "You're No Good," the music is dense and often concerned with the familiar themes of relationships and getting your act together, there is a wry and acerbic wit at work here. "You're No Good" is buoyed by the strong bass lines of Don Binns and the metallic crunch of guitarists Don Harrison and James Kingston, the band's lyricist and vocalist

adjusting to Kingston's style of singing and though his range as a vocalist is limited, his vocal style is a major factor in the band's unique sound. He whoops, snarls, bellows and almost yodels, and, in the slow tempo number "I Can See," his vocals are surprisingly tender. It is at once a haunting and touching moment for this band, aided by some of Kingston's most straightforward lyrics; "As we spy upon the children coming running home from school/As I tell you that I love you and you say you love me too," which make this one of the most memorable songs on the album Elsewhere, Kingston takes up more serious subject matters, such as substance abuse on "Call Me," one of the album's best songs. Here, Kingston chooses not to moralize but to depict the harm of dependency on anything that brings pleasure. In this case, it is drug abuse. Kingston's lyrics suggest the frustration of the concerned onlooker; "I must be mad/Mad to try to help you though you need it/You need it pretty bad/I understand/ Standing here and begging won't change you/Help detoxify your heart.

Getting your act together is the basis of "Jesus and Jim" a harrowing look at a splintering mind. The narrator is haunted by demons, calling out to some saviour ("I tried so hard to reach you/I wanted to believe you.") And while the chorus hints that Jesus is trying to reach him with his "maker on the line," there appears to be little hope in the closing lines; "Given the chance I'd crawl back up the womb/I can't stand the sight of another day/There's no relief in the drugs that I take/So gimme a reason I should stay."

Kingston's humour is best evident in "USA Long Distance," a humorous recounting of his impressions of our southern neighbours; "The first time I saw her/She was a black marine/The next time I saw her/She was a drag show queen." There are also tow versions of "Dreamgirl," each one sporting different lyrics. The first version is driven by a machine gun back beat, and the second version ends the album. Each one is driven by the tight and muscular arrangements developed by Kingston and the three Dons.

Produced by Chris Wardman (TPOH, Tragically Hip, Leslie Spit Free-o) the sound lives up to the saw blade that graces their logo. The band occasionally falters, though. "Circle, Circle" seems to go nowhere and there are moments when the thick arrangements threaten to plod, but this song is strong follow-up album and bodes well for Sons of Freedom, regardless of whether they ever find mass acceptance.

THAT KIND of museum is this?" Theresa Hubbard has been hearing that question ever since she and partner Alexander Birchler opened a museum in a forgotten South End building.

EXHIBITION

Days to be moved — A Store Room of Adjustable Items A Forgotten South End Bldg.

"This is a museum about the history of this building," Hubbard explains, "but it's also a museum that talks about history in general — it's a museum about museums."

Days to be moved — a Store Room of Adjustable Items is an exhibition in and about a former Chinese laundry on the corner of Barrington and Inglis Streets. Sculptors Hubbard and Birchler, who act as the museum's attendants, researched the history of the 60 year old building, compiling personal accounts and records of the location's past. These documents are filed in the museum's Inventory Catalogue, available for visitors to examine.

Hubbard and Birchler take turns acting as the museum's attendants, engaging in discussion, answering questions and inviting visitors to contribute to the museum's files.

Almost filling the building's interior is a scale model of the building itself, covered in plastic sheeting, labeled with museum-style tags. It, like the collection of books which line the building's walls, is on display, but is also in storage. The presentation of the artifacts evokes both the building's past as a storeroom and Inglis St.

Museum creators Hubbard and Birchler have practiced museummaking in Banff, Gdansk, Poland and elsewhere in Halifax. While trained as artists, they see their work as an alternative to the conventions of artwork and galleries.

"I find that how galleries work in general is that they focus on one audience," says Birchler. "Projects like this really encourage me, and encourage other people, to communicate.'

Birchler would like the museum to "get people to stop and reflect on their own lives - it is an interruption." The trio of Generation X ambassadors are part of that allegory, but just to make things perfectly clear, Coupland fills

The most common X generation subgroup and the only subgroup given to breeding. Squires exist almost exclusively in couples and are recognizable by their frantic attempts to recreate a semblance of Eisenhower-era plenitude in their daily lives in the face of exorbitant housing prices and two-job lifestyles.

This is typical of Coupland's wickedpsychographic hair-splitting. He identifies and then subdivides demographic groups with arch dedication: black holes, earth tones, yuppie wannabes and bleeding ponytails. In so doing, Coupland manages to be didactic without being preachy, rueful without whining.
