

William Briggs'

Our Own and Other Worlds

By JOSEPH HAMILTON

Author of "The Starry Hosts."

A PRIZE BOOK OF THE SCIENCE AND ART EDUCATION
COUNCIL OF LONDON, ENGLAND. WITH INTRODUCTION
BY REV. W. H. WITHROW, D.D.

"This book is exceedingly well written and instructive. Mr. Hamilton has thoroughly mastered and digested the literature on astronomy, and interprets its technical information into the language of common life. He gives the results of the latest thought and discovery on this subject. . . . The argument in favor of other worlds being inhabited is exceedingly strong and cumulative, and has won the commendation of eminent astronomers. . . . The book is highly educative in its character, as well as fascinating in its interest."

Hephaestus and Other Poems

By ARTHUR STRINGER

The London Times remarks upon Mr. Stringer's book as showing more original thought than any of the recent volumes of verse it has reviewed, with the one possible exception of Mr. Zangwill's.

Dr. Beattie Crozier, author of "History of Intellectual Development," declares: "In my judgment the poems are perfect of their kind, and if an English Stephen Phillips can make a great reputation through his, there is no reason why a Canadian Arthur Stringer should not do the same, for in no respect do we find his work inferior."

Another English critic remarks: "Mr. Stringer's blank verse is the best that has come out of money-mad America in many a day. Canada may well call him the 'Keats of the Dominion.'"

Summer Songs in Idleness

Poems by KATHERINE H. McDONALD JACKSON

"'Summer Songs in Idleness' is sure to attract more than usual attention on account of its graceful sentiment and charming form. The scent of flowers, the songs of birds, the rippling of waters and the spirit of the beautiful Canadian summer pervade the book and reveal the author as a close observer and a true lover of Nature. The opening poem
