till I get back.' "I went to a shack in Aguas Freseas, where a mighty wise girl named Timotea Carrizo lived with her mother. The girl was just about as nice as you ever saw. In the States she would have been called a brunette, but she was better than brunette-I should may she was what you you might term an ecru shade. I knew her pretty well, I told her about my friend Wainwright. She gave me a double handful of bark-calisaya, I think it wasand some more herbs that I was to mix with it and told me what to do. I was to make tea of it and give it to him and keep him from rum for a certain time. And for two weeks I did it. You know, I liked Wainwright. Both of us was broke, but Timotea sent us goat meat and plantains and tortillas every day, and at last I got the curse of drink lifted from Clifford Wainwright. He lost his taste for it. 'And in the cool of the evening him and me would sit on the roof of Timotea's mother's hut, eating harmless truck like coffee and rice and stewed crabs and playing the accordion.

"About that time President Gomez found out that the advice of C. Wainwright was the stuff he had been looking for. The country was pulling out of debt, and the treasury had enough boodle in it for him to amuse himself occasionally with the night latch.

"So down: from the regular capital he sends for Clifford Wainwright and makes him his private secretary at 20,-000 Peru dollars a year. Yes, sir-so much. Wainwright was on the water wagon-thanks to me and Timoteaand he was soon in clover with the jobs. But I'd have had to leave Aguas Frescas, so I didn't take any of 'em up. Say, I didn't tell you much about that girl-Timotea. We rather hit it off together. She was as good as you find 'em anywhere—Spanish mostly, with just a twist of lemon peel on top. What if they did live in a grass hut and went bare armed?

"A month ago," went on Trotter,
"she went away. I don't know where

"You'd better come back to the States," I insisted. "I can promise you positively that my brother will give you a position in cotton, sugar or sheetings, I am not certain which."

The gig from the Andador was coming ashore to take out the captain, purser and myself, the lone passenger. "I'll guarantee," said I confidently, that my brother will pay you $75 a

"All right, then," said William Trot-But a soft voice called across the blazing sands. A girl, faintly lemon tinted, stood in Calle Real and called. "It's her!" said William Trotter, looking. "She's come back! I'm obliged, but I can't take the job. Thanks, just the same. Ain't it funny how we can't do nothing for ourselves, but we can do wonders for the other fellow? You was about to get me with your financial proposition, but we've all got our weak points. Timotea's mine. And, say"- Trotter had turned to leave, but he retraced the step or two that he had taken. "I like to have left you without saying goodby," said he. "It kind of rattles you when they go away unexpected for a month and come back the same way. Shake hands. So long! Say, do you remember them gun shots we heard awhile ago up at the cuartel? Well, I knew what they was, but I didn't mention it. It was Clifford Wainwright being shot by a squad of soldiers against a stone wall for giving away secrets of state to that Nicamala republic. Oh, yes, it was rum that did it. He backslided and got his. I guess we all have our weak points and can't do much toward helping ourselves. Mine's waiting for me. I'd have liked to have that job with your brother, but-we've all got our weak

A big black Carib carried me on his back through the surf to the ship's By boat. On the way the purser handed me a letter that he had brought for me at the last moment from the post of fice in Aguas Frescas. It was from my brother.
