Hints to the Farmers

TAKING CARE OF THE FERTILIZER. A good method of taking care of the stable manure previous to drawing it out in the land during the summer, is to swing a number of watertight barrels on iron handles and attach to the steel be filled and run out into the Larn-yard and then dumped onto the 'vagon directly before drawing to the field.

There is a great advantage in this method over the wasteful, sloppy way of loading up the wagen at frequent intervals. The loose boards of the manure box allow the valuable fertilizing liquid to escape and run away with the bain-yard drainage water, thus the manure loses 50 per cent. of its value as a fer-tilizer. By using the barrels the liquid manure is conserved and the little time the wagon and the field, allows of little waste. If the stable does not carry a steel track, a good substitute for the barrel is a manure box lined with sheet iron, into this the manure can be dumped at any time of the day, if the wagon is kept out of the sun. The expense incurred is small and the economy of either method will soon be paying inter-est on the expenditure. When it is de-sired to save the manure until fall, a coment floor in the manure shed is the correct think. This saves evaporation and drying out by the sun, and also prevents leakage. When the floor is solid, water may be applied to keep manure from drying, or the liquid excrement washed over it. It is false economy to fortilize the barnyard, as there is no crops in that place to give relaying for crop in that place to give returns for the application. Steps should therefore be taken to prevent this loss, which am-ounts to millions of dollars annually. It is a waste of time and money to draw manure on to the land, if that manure has been lying in the barnyard, sub-jected to the spring and summer rains. Manufactured fertilizers are expensive and cannot take the place of the ani-mal excrement. Greater care in this respect will necessitate less artificial fer-tilization. The value of the crop harvest-ed must be returned to the land and not half of its value left in the barnyard drainage water or on the lanes leading to the fields, unless the farmer wishes to lower the fertility of his soft and its crop-producing power.

VALUE OF MANURE.

(Farmers' Advocate.) Nothing is much more certain than that farm manure has been grossly un-dervalued. The chemical elements, introgen, phosphoric acid and potash, would alone be valued at around $2.60 per ton of manure if occurring in commercial fer-tilizers. Such commercial value may be in excess of the real agricultural value, especially for nitrogen; but there is also te consider the perhaps greater physical benefit of the humus—greater are concerned—not to mention the stim-ulation of bacterial activity in the soil. Only a fraction of the manurial value is in so far at least as immediate returns recovered in the first year's crop in-crease. The benefit is reaped in de-creasing ratio for many, many years, as Rothamsted experiments indicate. While Notamsted experiments indicate. While the value of manure varies with many circumstances, we believe Prof. Cumming of the Nova Scotia Agricultural College was not beyond the mark in estimating average farm manure at $2.60

Flames were shooting clear across the street when the firemen arrived. Fifteen streams were turned into the blaze teen streams were turned into the blaze in very quick order and the fight for the mastery commenced. The walls crashed down and then the firemen had a momentary advantage Quick to seize the opportunity they pour ed the big streams into the middle of the blaze, and their work began to tell. At 8 o'clock nothing remained but a mass of smouldering ruins. Chapman's Kingsmill's, Maras & Brewster's were completely razed. The fire was exceedingly spectacular, the most spectacular in many, many years. The flames reached an enormous height, the flimsy dry goods and other light materials furnishing excellent material for the fire god.

At 5 o'clock the walls began tottering on Dundas street. Captain Case, who was in charge there, warned the men not to take any unnecessary risks. The firemen were very canny in approaching them.

The street railway system was put completely out of commission for several hours. All their feed wires were cut and it was impossible to get them connected for a long time. As a result the citizens felt the influence of the fire. They walked, and many could not understand the cause until they reached the down-town district, when they saw the ruined stores. Hundreds of the employees of the stores affected did not know of the fire until on their way to work when they discovered they had lost their positions, temporarily at least,

ARAH ATROCITIES.

London, Nov. 9.—In the absence of important happenings from the news telegraphed from Tripoli interest temporarily centres on the reports of Italian artocities. The testimony of English correspondents, as cabled, directly contradict the Italian official statements. Such reports are alluded to in the Ital ian press, but apparently censorship has forbidden the repreduction of such in-formation, so the people are unable to judge from the details. Hence it is not surprising that there is great indigna-tion among the Italian public, who be-lieve that the English stories are a part

The Italian soldiers are spreading the spirit of pessi-mism in the ranks. It is also pointed out that, as is well known, the Arab women are far worse than the men in their exorable treatment of the wounded and prisoners of any white race, and it is contended that the horrible female villainies are enough to destroy the last shred of chivalrous feeling on the part of the soldiers whose comrades suffered
