ONE OF NATURE'S ODDITIES.

Phenomenon That Follows Digging In Trinidad's Asphalt Lake.

Few people who travel over the asphalted streets of New York are aware of the origin of the black, pitchy mass that goes to make up the basis of the smooth roadway under their feet. Eighteen hundred miles, almost due south from New York, lies the little tropical island of Trinidad, a British possession off the coast of northern South America. At the southwestern extremity of this colony the famous Pitch lake is located on the summit of a small hill less than 200 feet above the level of the sea. In appearance there is nothing phenomenal about this wonder of the tropics, but a visit to the lake, as it is familiarly called, reveals one of the most unaccountabl oddities of nature in the annals of travel.

The tourist may take passage to the "land of the humming bird," as Trinidad people like their community to be called, and after securing accommodation at the only decent hotel in the colony proceed to the lake by one of the small government steamers plying coastwise three times weekly, disembark at the Brighton pier and proceed to the scene of the "dig-ging." Of all the crude, rough and ready means of extracting wealth from Mother Earth the Trinidad lake asphalt opera-tions are the most striking. The visitor arrives on a fairly level plateau, spotted here and there with tiny peols of water, beneath which the soft, shiny substance known as asphalt glitters in the reflections of a fierce tropical sun. Scattered over the surface of the lake dozens of swarthy negroes are plying pick and hoe, extracting the tar coaly looking stuff from the earth. One may sit in the shade of a nearby shrub or under the protecting shade of an umbrella and watch the negroes pile heap after heap of the asphalt into the endless chain of tubs that hurry along to the pier from which one has but recently landed until a yawning excavation of 20 or more feet suggests to the supervising darky that the time has come to move a bit farther on. In the course of a few hours the excavation resulting from the morning's digging begins to look less deep, and eventide the spot from which more that five or ten tons have been dug is again level with the surrounding earth and ready to be dug over by the gang of noisy blacks. From the point of digging noisy blacks. From the point of digging to the pier is but a mile or less of endless chain descent. Moored to the pier are big sailing vessels and sometimes steamers, into whose capacious holds the tubs discharge the pitch at the rate of 200 or 300 tons per day.

On the voyage to Trinidad, West Indies, and during the traveler's stay there many other objects of interest may be "taken in." Within a few miles of the city of Port of Spain is the Blue basin, a lofty waterfall culminating in a valley opposite direction are the Mar falls, of equal beauty and novelty, while all around the city and suburbs are villages of Indians in their primitive gatherings of tribes and castes, but quite alert in their readiness to make money by the sale of queer relics of their craft.

There is but one direct line of steamers to Trinidad and one to the neighboring islands of the Antilles. The rates of passage are reasonable enough, although modation leaves something to be desired. The voyage requires anywhere from 9 to 12 days, according to the point of disembarking, and the cost of a round trip of five or six weeks may be covered by the prudent tourist for an expenditure of $300.

He Kept the Watch. On one occasion Jose Maria, a Spanish brigand, robbed an English gentleman and his servant of their horses and everything they possessed save their clothes. The Englishman was a pleasant, attractive youth and submitted to the robbery with great good humor. This appealed to Jose Maria, and as they were 40 miles from Seville, whither the traveler was going, he determined that he should not walk that distance and gave him back his servant's horse and a doubloon-$16-out of the 200 he had prised an American. "One of the strangest things about the management of English restaurants," remarked a gentleman who has recently returned from a visit to London to the writer, "is the custom of charging diners for every slice of bread which they eat. For instance, a day or two before my departure from the British capital I, as a mark of esteem, invited several English friends to dine with me at one of the most celebrated of the fashionable west end restaurants. Well, the repast was served in a private room, and everything went off spiendidly until the coffee and cigar stage was reached and I asked that my bill be brought to me. There, to my utter astonishment, the head waiter, in the hearing of the assembled company, approached me and in a loud voice asked, 'And how many breads 'ave you 'ad, sir?' "This question I could not answer, as I had not been engaged in counting the number of slices consumed, but one of my guests, who had evidently kept track of the bread, noticing my embarrassment, said in my behalf, 'Four plates.'

"'Ah,' muttered the walter, 'that's 1 shillin bextra.' And after adding the amount to my bill he handed it to me for inspection

"Of course I paid for the bread, but I have been wondering ever since I did so why the American custom of uot of gorgeous tropical verdure. Eight miles charging for 'the staff of life' is not > Apcient Origin of Military Salute. When did the military salute come into use? It certainly dates from the earlier half of the fifteenth century, says the London Chronicle. In the "Speculum Humanæ Salvationis," which was issued before the invention of printing by movable types, there is an exceedingly quaint illustration in which Abraham is represented as saluting Melchisedec. The patriarch is in mediæval armor and apparently on guard, and it would seem that Melchisedec is bringing him refreshments of water, and the salute is distinctly the military one still in use.

Before Mrs. Wimbley's friends, the

Before Mrs. Wimbley's friends, the Parkers, came from the east on their long expected visit, she took an afternoon off and gave her little son a series of instructions calculated to improve his behavior at the table. Egbert had been in the habit of resting on his elbows while eating. This, his mother told him, was one of the worst offenses against good manners that people could commit.

"You must hever put your elbows on the table when we have company," the boy's mother said, "bat if you do I will wink at you. That will mean that you must take them down. No gentleman ever rests his elbows on the table, and no boy that does so can hope to grow up to boy that does so can hope to grow up to be a gentleman."

After the Parkers had finished their first dinner at the Wimbley flat the men got to discussing business, and while the ladies were sipping their coffee the talk drifted around to politics. Mr. Parker leaned forward, put his elbows on the table and rested his chin in one of his-

Mr. Parker's interest had finally been attracted, and, turning to Egbert with a smile, he said: "What's wrong, little man? Didn't

"Yes." Egbert replied, "but mamma says people that put their elbows on the table can't ever get to be gentlemen, and she knows you have them on, too. because I saw her look."

THE COSTLIEST OF SAUSAGES. Lyons, Which May Sell For as Much as $1 a Pound. "The costliest of all sausages," said man familiar with the trade, "is Lyons sausages, imported from France. Lyons sausage sells in Paris at 2 francs and more a pound. Here it is sold at 80 cents to $1 a pound. Lyons sausage is also produced in this country. That made here is even finer than the imported, but sells here, however, for somewhat less. "Lyons is rather a large sausage. It i put up in the largest size hog casings, and it is made of beef and pork. The meats used in making it are of the very best and they are prepared with the greatest care. From the beef all the sinews and veins are removed, and there is left only the selected parts of the meat. The beef is chopped very fine, so fine as to make of it practically a paste. The pork used is from the back fat of hogs. This is not chopped fine, as the beef is, but is cut in to irregular shaped pieces which show in the sausage when it is cut. The spices used in the seasoning are of course of the choicest. The Lyons sausage is hard

"The art of sausage making has so improved in this country that now, as you can say without reservation, the finest in the United States. This is true without exception. The American Lyons sausage, for example, is better than the imported. Some American Lyons is exne of that thus exported is reimperted and sold here as imported Lyons.

"Lyons sausage is served in the very finest of hotels and restaurants, and it may be found on bills of fare before the soup, served as an appetizer. For that purpose it is very excellent. I fancy that its increasing use in this manner in New York in recent years is due in great measure to calls for it from Russian visitors. The Russians have always been fond of Lyons sausage, as they are also of caviare.

"In a Chicago sausage factory making fine sausages the owner, who was show-ing us over the establishment, said when it came noon:
"'Now we will have luncheon.'

"What he gave us was Lyons sausage of his own make, pumpernickel, fresh butter and burgundy, and an admirable luncheon it was."

These letters are an abbreviation of the words "I owe unto." Thus in West's "Symboleographie," 1647, Sec. 101, the following precedent is given: "I, A. B., owe unto D. B. xli of lawfull English money, for the payment whereof I bind me to my heires. In witnesse, etc., I have put my hand and seale the xx. day of, etc."

There were earlier editions of this book. Other short forms, known as "bills obligatory," which also contain the words "I owe unto," are given in "A Booke of Presidents," 1572, f. 144. It appears from these precedents that an I O U was formerly of the nature of an obligation or bond under seal. At the present day it is a mere admission of debt on which the defendant can be sued, and it requires neither seal nor stamp.-Notes and Queries.
