Fooling the Juggler.

An inquisitive reporter in New York, has had an interview with Miss Haidee Heller, half-sister to the late Robert Heller, the well-known conjuror. We make this extract: "Robert was very much interested in all foreign conjuring. I remember on the street in Hong-Kong one day he discovered a little, sleepy old Chiaman at a corner doing the ring trick, and doing it better than he could himself. He stopped, paid the Chinaman to give him a lesson, and the following day hunted up the China conjurer and showed him combinations and improvements on his own trick that made the pigtail on his astonished head vibrate with admiration.

"And about the Indian jugglers?" "I could tell you a hundred stories of those strange creatures. Robert used often to mystify them and expose their tricks, to their great rage. We were lying off some miles away before Madras, on the steamship Sumatra, which had broken her shaft just as we left Madras for Ceylon, when a boat put off from shore with a party of natives to sell wife's fortune. He was dismissed the us fruits, and among them was one of service and imprisoned for six menths their most famous men of mystery. He for sending a challenge to a superior came on board, and it was suggested officer. The conspirators hired a "loft" came on board, and it was suggested that he should perform there. Spreading some sand on the deck, he planted in it a mango seed, from eighteen inches high.

Then he did some surprising things with a venomous cobra, which he carried rolled in the cloth about his loins, concluding with a very clever trick, in which two pigeons, one black and one white, which were made to vanish at will, to chance from one basket to another. The captain urged Robert to do something to bother the man, who same evening, one of the conspirators on was very conceited about himself.
"So Robert suddenly asked to look at "The commotion was frightful. The poor native shrieked and cursed, and gave vent to his rage in the choicest

The mighty white magician looked with merry eyes at the juggler's dis-tress. Then when the row was at its height and I began to feel uneasy about the issue of the prank, Robert suddenly raised his hands—oh, those beautiful, white, wonder-working hands. He mysteriously beckoned, as if summoning the dove from its watery grave, and pointed upward. (No one had looked overboard after the first dart of the bird into the water). There was the white dove circling round and round in the air; in one moment it alighted on the bit of carpet before its despondent owner, unharmed. Ourses gave way to profound salaams and prayers that the great white magician might never

"And how did he do it? Why, simply by having in his hand one of his stage properties—a white dove's head—which had figured in a hundred tricks. Quick as thought he had turned the living dove's head under his wing. As we were so far from land, though set free, it returned to the ship."

Terrible Tragedy in a Farmer's Family

The Morristown (Tenn.) Dispatch says: The small country town of and away from railroad communication, has witnessed a tragedy that exhibits a curious phase of justice. About eight miles from the village there lived a few weeks ago a family of well-to-do farmers, called the Eppersons. The family consisted of the father, mother, four sons and two daughters. The father was a good man, but was occasionally under the influence of drink. At such times he was dangerous, surly and unmanage-There had been some talk about the relations of the man and his wife. but it was generally believed that there was nothing serious between them.

A short time since Epperson came home one day under the influence of liquor, and at once began to quarrel with his wife. In a few moments they came to blows, and he was beating her very severely. At this juncture Joe, one of the sons, ran in, and seeing the state of things, went to the protection of his mother. He was a deformed man, having been born with only one arm As he interfered in the fight the father turned from his wife and attacked Joe savagely, declaring he would kill him. Being hard pressed, Joe whipped out a knife and commenced cutting his father. In a few minutes the old man fell to the floor. In the meantime his elder brother had entered the room, and seeing Joe engaged in a deadly conflict with his father, determined to take his father's part. He, therefore, drew his pistol, and leveled it at his brother. Before he could fire his mother ran between Joe and the pistol, and received the ball in her breast. The son fired again, and this time struck his sister in the knee; and once again, this time giving a boy brother a flesh wound.

The fracas was stopped here by the condition of the father and mother. In a short time the mother died, having been shot by her eldest son. Before dying, she begged that her slayer should not be prosecuted, as he had killed her unintentionally, and she did not blame him for interfering for his father. The father died also, having been killed by his second son. It is said that before he died he also forgave his slayer, saying that the son was right to take the part of his mother. The sister, who had been shot in the knee by her eldest brother, died also.

Of course the terrible tragedy created intense excitement, even in this comparatively lawless county. A sort of preliminary trial of the men was had, and they were acquitted of any blame in the matter. The son who killed his father was held to have acted purely in self-defense, and the son that killed his mother and sister was held to have done so accidentally, while interfering to prevent the commission of an unlawful act. They were therefore put at liberty and have been at large ever since.

It is doubtful if the matter will ever come into court again. The sons express great sorrow over the affair, but are known to be pretty desperate char-

Why He Came.

A gentleman who frequented a circus noticed a boy among the audience who was sound asleep every time he happened to be in. Curious to know why the urchin should resort to such a place for somniferous purposes, our friend went up one evening and accosted him: My little fellow, what do you go to

An Old-Time Conspiracy. Sixty years ago there was dragged into the light of a London afternoon a woe-begone and squalid lot of men, known in history ever since as the Cato street conspirators. They had formed, after a series of deliberations in the lowest of pot houses in different parts of the British metropolis, a plot to assassinate at one fell swoop the whole of his majesty's ministers, whose heads, severed from their bodies, were to be brought away in a sack provided for the purpose. The 23d of February was fixed for the accomplishment of this terrible crime, as it was known all over London that on that day a dinner, at which all the cabinet officers were to be present, was to be given at Lord Harrowby's house in Grosvenor square. The leader of this band of assassins was Arthur Thistlewood, who was the son of a substantial farmer in Lincolnshire, and had borne the king's commission both in a militia and a line regiment. But he was an inveterate gambler, and soon got rid not only of his own but his in Cato street, just off Edgware road, where they assembled that day to await the signal. After they had murdered which he produced a mango tree some eighteen inches high. to the Bank of England and the cavalry barracks, and see what followed. Fortunately, however, the ministers got word of the designs of Thistlewood and his gang, and the banquet was postponed; but the Archbishop of York, who lived next door to Lord Harrowby, hap-pening to have a dinner-party that self-

He was closely followed by a party of the foot guards, under the companion of Lord Frederick Fitzclarence, and by a detachment of the household brigade, under Lord William Lennox, who is, by the way, the only surviving participant of that day. The conspirators, all save one, were captured, and numbered nine persons. The leader alone escaped. When the officers were swarming up the ladder leading to the roof, Thistlewood ran a sword through the heart of one of them, jumped from a window, and gof away; but the next day he was captured in bed i. a Bow street runner, who thus gained a reward of $5,000. These conspirators were the last prisoners confined in the Tower of London. Each and every one of them was soon after beheaded; but to this day no one has ever discovered the discovered the swallowing a morsel of food or a drop of identity of the "men in the men lived for seven weeks without swallowing a morsel of food or a drop of identity of the "man in the mask," who, in the absence of the regular hangman —he declined to perform the task of decapitation—cut off the heads of the

If a man pays his keepers for vermin so much a tail, he will very probably pay for a good deal that has not been been killed on his own land. But as vermin wander a good deal, if they have been killed in the district, it comes to much the same thing. If trappers on any estate are paid so much a head for what they may capture, they are very apt to borrow dead vermin from neighboring trappers who may be merely paid wages without any vermin allowance.

There is no better sport than a good rat hunt, with two or three ferrets and Sneadville, Hancock county, near here a couple of sharp terriers. Some time surance could be given that it would reago I went over to a stackyard built near a small stream; the banks of the stream were honey-combed with rats. We put in the ferrets, and the rats bolted, taking headers into the stream like frogs. We had a couple of trout landing nets with long handles, and as the rats swam down the stream we ladled them out for the terriers. Altogether, in stream and stacks, we killed some thirty or forty rats, and left them lying about. The farmer himself happened to be away on that particular day; but after we were gone one of the farm servants collected he rats, took them to his master, who paid for rats, and got the reward. This was fair enough. But that same morning these same dead rats were carried over to a neighboring farm, and the floor of an old barn was salted with the dead rats. After dark the man turned out with a lantern and some sticks, shut the door of the barn, and kicked up a row. The farmer came out to see what was the matter; the man opened the door, showed him the straw turned over, all the rat-holes stopped and a score or two of dead rats. He also paid for them. I don't know if these particular rats earned any more money. But if any of the neignboring trappers were working on tail money, he probably would have the last pull out of them.

An old gentleman used to pay his son (a mere boy) so much a tail; sometimes the old gentleman thought the tails were a little dry and shriveled. and suspected they were not fresh caught—in fact, tails that he had seen before; so, when produced, he took to throwing them in the fire. The boy was a clever rat-catcher, and the rats were getting scarce; so, when he caught them, he cut off the tails merely, letting the old rat go to breed. So much for paying by tails !—English Paper.

An Ambitious Frontiersman.

Near the site of Old Fort Kearney, in Western Nebraska, there has resided for years a queer character who is wellknown to the national representatives at Washington. At each recurring session of Congress, Mr. Moses H. Sydenham, for that is his name, appeals personally and through letters to Senators and Congressmen, to remove the national capitol to this, "the geographical center of the United States and the universe." He is a monomaniac on the subject, and has designated the exact spot with a framework of poles. Tourists who have time to do so, stop off at Kearney Junction, to view the scene of Jules Vernes' pen portrayals in "Eighty Days Around the World," visit the site of the old fort, and to have a chat with cld Mr. Sydenham. We did not find him at home. Those, however, who in-formed us that he had gone to Washington, communicated several new and interesting facts about the old gentlesmall balance for the national exchequer, after he himself had deducted three per cent. for transacting the very important business. - American Agriculturist.

A SINGULAR CASE.

Man Swallows His False Teeth ard One evening recently Levi Wagonseller, aged thirty-eight years, and employed in a cotton factory, entered a restaurant in Philadelphia to get sup-per. When about half through the meal he suddenly felt something sharp and pointed going down his throat, causing him intense pain. For a moment he thought he had swallowed a large and piece of hone, but putting his hand to his mouth instinctively on feeling the pain, he found that his false teeth were missing, and he knew that it must have been they which had gone down his throat. The teeth were three in number. They were fastened to a silver plate, and had been in his mouth for many years. Recently the hooks holding them in place had worn loose, and the artificial teeth had annoyed him by falling from his mouth several times. Plate and all had gone down his throat, and he could feel them odged against his breast. Alarmed and suffering intensely, Wagonseller went to his home, which was in a suburb of the city. He could eat no solid food, and for two days took nothing into his stomach. On the third day he managed to force down a little bread and ceive treatment from her physician, Dr. Stewart, who was called upon to visit the patient on the fifth day after the occurrence. He advised him to take a swallow of gin as the readlest means of dislodging the teeth, which still remained in the throat. The patient followed his advice, and almost immediately felt the teeth going down. But this only led to a worse result. The teeth moved down and lodged about one inch and a half above the entrance to the stomach. Had they passed into the stomach, according to medical authority, the chief danger in the case would have been over. But lodging as they did the patient could swallow nothing, not even milk or water. It was absolutely impossible to get anything down his throat. Milk was recommended, but when it would be poured down as soon as the glass would be removed from his lips it would come back, exudwater. Even the juice of an orange he could not swallow. From a stout, hearty man, weighing probably 190 pounds, he dwindled away to a mere skeleton. His hands became horrible to look at by reason of their loss of flesh. Strangely enough, too, all the time the man, who was perfectly conscious and rational, had no appetite, no craving for food. The smell of victuals, he said. made him sick. From the time he went to his sister's house, four days after the accident, he had not stood on his feet, lying alternately on a bed and in an invalid's chair. This posture he kept, at the recommendation of his physician, until from lack of food he became so weakened that there was no option in the matter, and he had to lie all the time. Operations with an instrument was suggested by his physician, but this his sister would not consent to, unless as-the physician could not promise, and no such operation was tried.

After being for over seven weeks without food Wagonseller died, death resulting from inanition, or, in other words, starvation. To the very last he had no appetite for food. The day be-fore his death he began to get short of breath and told his relatives that he felt himself dying. Up to the last hour he retained his senses and talked freely about his case, instructing his relatives to have a post-mortem examination made upon his body. In accordance with his request the examination was made by Drs. Stewart and Agnew. The plate, with the teeth in it, was found about one inch and a half above the enrance of the stomach, the hooks firmly imbedded in the flesh. There were marks at certain intervals in the throat. showing the progress of the plate as it passed downward, the prints of the teeth being in several places plainly visible. Had the plate, which was about two inches long and an inch wide, passed into the stomach, in the opinion of the physicians it would have dissolved and he man's life been saved. As it was, the plate passed down the throat in a transverse form, and once lodged at the furthest point, displacement was im-

sult in saving his life. This, of course,

Why Chinamen's Coats Have Five Buttons.

"Why does the mantle of our national costume have five buttons, neither more nor less? This number was not fixed upon capriciously nor because of fashion. We Chinese wear it solely that to us so earnestly. These are: Jen, y, ly, tche and sin; that is to say: Jen, humanity; y, justice; ly, order; tche, prudence, and sin, rectitude, uprightness. You will perceive that humanity stands before all the other virtues. When one has humanity he knows and feels that the unfortunate are to be respected; he does not add trouble to trouble, sorrow to sorrow or misfortune to misfortune. Why ladies' gloves have six buttons, Neither was our number fixed upon capriciously. It reminds us o. our six cardinal principles recommended so earnestly by Worth. These are slam, bang, whang, hoo, doo and boo; that is to say, slam, never be out of the fashion; bang, always, if possible, be the first in it; whang, darn the expense; hoo, stick to long trains, high heels, and above all, corsets, till they kill you; doo, marry rich; and boo, marry any-how. You will perceive that boo stands before all the other principles. - New York Graphic.

A Cheap Lightning Rod. The discovery of an extremely simple and cheap means to protect houses from being struck by lightning has recently been announced in a French agricu tural paper. This consists in the use of man. In his last general circular to the Washington Solons, he guaranteed them that, in case they should decide to remove the capitol to this "geographical first trials of this simple apparatus was center." he would sell enough corner lots and adjacent territory to pay for all some intelligent agriculturists, and the the expenses of removal, and leave a results were so satisfactory that soon afterward eighteen communes of the Tarbes district provided all their homes with these bundles of straw, and there have been no accidents from lightning since in the district. Probably such a "protector" would nswer as well as any—in case the houses were not struck. "But why do you come!"
"Oh, I can't help it—I must come; I about a foot, and then advertised to sell that won't bear that test.

A Boston merchant closed his floor any—in case the houses were not saturated. There are a good many lightning-rods that won't bear that test.

Humming-Birds.

As an illustration of the luxuriant development of tropical nature, and the changes and varieties consequent upon natural selection, Mr. Wallace gives a detailed account of the family of the humming-birds. These beautiful little creatures are found only in America, and are almost exclusively confined to the tropical zone. There are 400 different species, the largest about the size of a swallow, and the smallest scarcely larger than a humble-bee. They live upon honey, which they extract from flowers, but require also a certain proportion of insect food. In Juan Fernandez, the humming-birds, which belong to a Chilian species, form a very good illustration in the changes through which they have passed, of variation and natural selection, the factors in these changes being abundance of food, and freedom from the competition of any rival species.

The tongue of the humming-bird is tubular and retractile; it is very long, and is capable of being extended far be-yond the beak, and rapidly drawn back, so as to suck up honey from the nectaries of flowers and capture small insects. Seen in its familiar haunts poised on rapid wing in the vivid sunlight, the humming-bird gleams like a jewel with the iridescent hues of the amethyst, the milk. On this day the sufferer went to ruby and the sapphire; but like the the University hospital to see Dr. Agnew, who, after examining him, seemed to have little hope of saving his soft, silky green, such as adorns the parrot's neck and breast, but a bright, dazzling metallic hue, which seems to Wagonseller then came to Philadelreflect every varying gleam of the sunrhia to stop at his sister's house to re-shine. The flight of these little creatures is inconceivably rapid. "The bird," Mr. Wallace says, "may be said to live in the air—an element in which it performs every kind of evolution with the greatest ease, frequently rising perpendicularly, flying backward, pirouetting or dancing off, as it were, from place to place, or from one part of a tree to another, sometimes descending, at others ascending."

Where Artesian Wells Abound. A correspondent in Fountain Creek township, Iroquois county, Ill., writes as follows on the subject of artesian

I will state that Iroquois county not less than 500 or may be nearly 600 flowing artesian wells, of which nearly 200 are in the town of Watseka, the county seat of Iroquois. The soil of the northern part of the county is mainly a rich, black, sandy loam from two to two and a half feet deep, with mostly a yellow clay, more or less mixed with some gravel, from three to twelve and fifteen feet deep. After this comes a soft blue clay at variable depths, say 100 and 150 feet, with sometimes but little change. Sometimes a small vein of sand is struck at a depth of from forty to seventy-five feet, which contains sufficient artesian water to flow to the top; but after the boring is continued again through the blue clay to the depth of seventy-five to 150 feet from the surface, then they strike a second vein, which is most always the strongest and will make a stronger and higher flow. I have not heard of any rock ever being found. Generally the flow is about two inches, in which a one and one-quarter inch gaspipe is put down from top to bot-tom, when comes the operation of pumptom, when comes the operation of pumping sand, after which the water will flow. though it is sometimes the case that the water will not raise quite high enough to flow. The strength of the flow of these wells is quite variable from the size of a straw to a three-inch stream. The general surface of this artesian country is rather flat, and the ravines on the prairie are few and not deep. Some creek banks are only at the most eight to ten feet deep; in the timber somewhat deeper. The cost for boring and tubing with one and one-quarter inch pipe now does not amount to over fifty to sixty cents per foot instead of the former high prices.

The True Way to Invigorate.

The true way to invigorate a feeble system is to infuse activity into the operations of the stomach, that wondrous alembic in which the food is transmuted into the constituents of blood, the chief element of our vitality. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, because it accomplishes this end, is greatly to be preferred to many so-called tonics, useful indeed as appetizers, but inoperative as aids to digestion and assimilation. Flesh as a Fertilizer. I was recently shown a grapevine that promises to cover one side of the Scottsville (N. Y.) flour-mill. The proprietor stated that the original owner drove to Rochester forty years ago with the hams of twenty sheep, but, fancying the price offered too lew, brought them home and hung them in the attic. A few years since the present owner found ye olden nutton still unmarketed, and ordered it buried at a proper distance from the vine that now displays such remarkable vigor. Deceased animals are often used as a fertilizer with satisfactory results, peing quartered and buried near fruit trees and vines. The distance at which the roots of trees will receive such nourishment is with dwarfs from ten to fifeen feet, with standard apples, fifty to 100 feet, or sometimes further, depending on age and vigor.

Two years ago I buried a large dog, supposed to be affected with hydrophosupposed to be affected with hydropho-bia, eighteen inches deep, near fruit trees and plants, expecting them to be fertilized thereby. The year following I set a row of monarch strawberries directly over the place of burial. All the plants over the decayed body, and near it on either side, died after repeated planting; those next nearest were feeble, but those adjoining these were vigorous. This was as I had anticipated. have known large apple trees to be parrots of its native forests, the basis of its brilliant coloring is green, not a soft, silky green, such as adorns the parrot's neck and breast, but a bright, not high about the trunk.

The poetry of fruit-eating is marred by the knowledge that the plants or trees have been nourished by the decayed bodies of mad dogs and distempered cattle; but the facts of the case tend to dispel such sentiments. Instances are recorded where vegetables seemed to be flavored offensively by odorous fertilizers, but I think such flavor was received by actual contact with the fertilizer, and not by anything absorbed by the feeding-roots. Flesh is reduced in nature's laboratory to the pure elements before it is available as plant-food. The most economical method of utilizing the dead bodies of animals would be in burying in the compost heaps, were it practicable.—Charles A. Green, Monroe county, N. Y.
