IVANHOE.

(BY SIR WALTER SCOTT, BART.) CHAPTER XXVII. [CONTINUED]

'A Jewess' said Cedric, availing himself of the information to get clear of their interruption. 'Let me pass, woman! stop me not at your peril. I am fresh from my holy office, and would avoid pollution.'

'Come this way, father,' said the old hag, 'thou art a stranger in this castle, and canst not leave it without a guide. Come hither, for I would speak with thee. And thou daughter of an accursed race, go to the sick man's chamber, and tend him until my return; and woe betide if you again quit it without my permission!'

Rebecca retreated. Her importunities had prevailed upon Urfrid to suffer her to quit the turret, and Urfrid had employed her services where she herself would most gladly have paid them; by the bedside of the wounded Ivanhoe. With an understanding awake to their dangerous situation, and prompt to avail herself of each means of safety which occurred, Rebecca had hoped something from the presence of a man of religion, who, she learned from Urfrid, had penetrated into this godless castle. She watched the return of the supposed ecclesiastic; with the purpose of addressing him, and interesting him in favor of the prisoners; with what imperfect success the reader has been just acquainted.

When Urfrid had with clamors and menaces driven Rebecca back to the apartment from which she had sallied, she proceeded to conduct the unwilling Cedric into a small apartment, the door of which she heedfully secured. Then fetching from a cupboard a stop of wine and two flagons, she placed them on the table, and said in a tone rather asserting a fact than asking a question, 'Thou art Saxon, father—deny it not,' she continued, observing that Cedric hastened not to reply; 'the sounds of my native language are sweet to mine ears, though seldom heard save from the tongues of the wretched and degraded serfs on whom the proud Normans impose the meanest drudgery.'

'Do not Saxons priests visit this castle, then?' replied Cedric; 'it were, methinks, their duty to comfort the outcast and oppressed children of the soil.'

'They come not—or if they come, they better love to revel at the board of their conquerors,' answered Urfrid, than to hear the groans of their countrymen—so, at least, report speaks of them—of myself I can say little. This castle, for ten years, has opened to no priest save the debauched Norman chaplain who partook the nightly revels of Front-de-Beuf, and he has been long gone to render an account of his stewardship. But thou art a Saxon—a Saxon priest, and I have one question to ask of thee.'

'I am a Saxon,' answered Cedric 'but unworthy, surely, of the name of priest. Let me begone on my way—I swear I will return, or send one of our fathers more worthy to hear your confession.'

'Stay yet awhile,' said Urfrid; 'the accents of the voice which thou hearest now will soon be choked in the cold earth, and I would not descend to it like the beast I have lived. But wine must give me strength to tell the horrors of my tale! She poured out a cup, and drank it with a frightful avidity, which seemed desirous of draining the last drop in the goblet. 'It stupifies,' she said looking upwards, as she finished her draught, 'but it cannot cheer. Partake it, father, if you would hear my tale without sinking down upon the pavement.' Cedric would have avoided pledging her in this ominous conviviality, but the sign which she made to him expressed impatience and despair. He complied with her request, and answered her challenge in a large wine cup; she then proceeded with her story, as if appeased by his compliance.

'I was not born,' she said, 'father the wretch that thou now seest me—I was free, was happy, was beloved, and loved, and was beloved. I am now a slave, miserable and degraded—the sport of my masters' passions while I had yet beauty—the object of their contempt, scorn, and hatred, since it has passed away. Dost thou wonder, father, that I should hate mankind, and, above all, the race that has wrought this change in me? Can the wrinkled decrepit hag before thee, whose wrath must vent itself in impotent curses, forget she was once the daughter of the noble Thane of Thorquilstone, before whose frown a thousand vassals trembled?'
