Barking Dogs.

be awfully good to you if you needed it."

"I know," quavered the tearful lady; "but it seems to me she's barking most of the time."

Do You Know Any Barking Dogs?

Do you know anyone like that, reader friend?

Most of us do, for there are a great many people in the world whose life is a negligible quantity compared to their bark, but who somehow seem to be barking most of the time.

I know a woman who is generous to a fault and always ready to serve and help her friends, but she insists on reserving to herself the right to continually criticize them and to say sharp little things about them. She doesn't mean half she says. It is just a habit she has gotten into, but I doubt if the happiness she gives by the service of her hands counterbalances the unhappiness she causes by the wounds of her tongue.

Yet if anyone should tell her that she would be greatly surprised. She thinks the fact that she is good at heart is the only thing that counts, and among her other criticisms she has many sharp words for the easy-going people who are pleasant-

We were talking about a woman who is always saying sharp little things. She had just given tongue to a needlessly frank criticism of a sensitive friend, and the latter was on the verge of tears.

"Never mind," said the comforting one, "her bite. Why she'd be awfully good to you if you needed it."

spoken, but not so quick to help as she.

That Doesn't Make His Home Peaceful.

Again I know a man who dearly loves all his family and yet he spends most of his waking time fussing and scolding about one thing or another. It is hardly a case of his bark being worse than his bite, for he really has no bite at all. He is all bark. Nevertheless that does not make the atmosphere of his home peaceful or livable.

Nobody wants a barking dog round all the time any more than a dog with a tendency to bite.

One may lacerate the flesh, but the other lacerates the nerves.

He means well,—he has a good heart,—his bark is worse than his bite,—these are all expressions that describe, but do not justify, the habit of self-indulgence in irritability.

We all know what place is paved with good intentions. I suspect if there is any such place except in our own hearts there will be a good many dogs whose bark is worse than their bite there.

Question—I am engaged to a young man of considerable means. I am a working girl and cannot afford an elaborate trousseau or a large wedding. He is an only son and his people are set on having a big wedding. He wants to give me the money for this and for my trousseau. Shall I accept it?—Engaged Girl.

Answer—A small wedding suitable to your means would be the ideal solution if it were not for his parents' feeling. But of course they should be considered. Why not accept the money for the wedding (by the way, I think it should come from his parents, since the expensive wedding is their wish), but keep the trousseau simple and within your means. He can give you whatever he wishes later.

What Are You Doing for that Eczema?

"Nothing; I've about given up trying to cure it."

"That is not wise. Do as I did and you will probably be cured in a short time. I used Zylex and Zylex Soap with it and my Eczema began to improve at once. A couple of boxes cured. You can get Zylex at your druggist's."

Murphy's Vow.

"I'll find that sniper and get my own back," vowed Private Murphy, of the South Stafford's, in broad Irish, after the sniper had wounded him in the arm. And it was that vow which led Murphy to perform a particularly gallant deed. With a number of his comrades he was on outpost duty, and they were being continually picked off by the sniper. Two nights after Murphy was missing from his post, but the sniping had stopped. Later on search being made for him, he was found lying at the foot of a big tree, close behind the body of the sniper, who was pinned to the ground with Murphy's bayonet. Murphy told the officer that when he located "the blighter" he was high up in the tree, and getting underneath he threatened to shoot, when the German dropped his rifle and scrambled down. "Then I gave him a good pasting with my fists, and finished off by pinning him down."

Many Americans in British Army.

The great number of Americans who have enlisted in the Canadian and British armies is aptly illustrated by the visit of one of the royal princesses of England to a hospital in France which was filled with Canadian wounded.

On her arrival at the hospital she spoke of the noble response of the colonial sons of the Empire to the call of the mother country and expressed a wish to personally talk with some of the wounded.

Seeing one young soldier swathed in bandages, she went to his bed.

"Where were you born, my good man?" she asked.

"Newark, N.J.," was the unexpected answer.

She went to another wounded man's bedside and again asked the question.

"Wheeling, W. Va., ma'am," answered the supposed Canadian.

Still in search of one of the colonial sons of the Empire, she went to still another wounded man.

"I know you were born in Canada," she said. "Tell me where?"

"I'm from St. Louis, Mo., mum," answered the man.

The percentage of Americans in the British army and especially among the Canadian troops is very high. One of the colonels of a Canadian regiment now at the front told the writer that many of the Canadian regiments were composed of from one-third to one-fourth Americans.

Generous Praise to the Canadians

British officers admit that had it not been for the superb fighting of the Canadian regiments the Germans would have been in Calais two months ago.

The Canadian regiments have held the Germans in check at this most important section of the line, despite the most strenuous effort to break through.

An American correspondent was going through a Canadian hospital and was attracted by the conversation of a wounded man. The correspondent recognized his New York origin by his talk. He had lost both legs, but was cheerful and vocally kicking.

"You're an American, are you not?" asked the correspondent.

"No, sir; I'm a British subject," answered the legless hero.

"You're no more a British subject than I am," the correspondent said to him. "I know you're from around New York."

"You've got me with the goods," the supposed British soldier answered. "I was born in Olive Street, New York. But don't squawk. I told them I was a British subject and if they find out I'm an American I may not get my pension, and I'll certainly need it when I get out of here."

TREATY OF BERLIN signed 1878,

as a result of a meeting of representatives of the European powers invited by Prince Bismarck to revise the Russo-Turkish Treaty of San Stefano.

The British representatives were Lords Beaconsfield and Salisbury.

"Peace with Honour."

BALLOT ACT passed 1872 in England. This Act introduced secret voting, with the object of preventing bribery and intimidation. The Bill was introduced by Mr. Forster in 1871, stoutly resisted by the Conservatives and rejected by the Lords. The next session it was passed by the Lords as an experiment to be tried for eight years. It has remained in force ever since.

While there's a right to need my vote, A wrong to sweep away, Upl' d clouted knee and ragged coat! A man's a man to-day! —Whittier (On Election Day.)

I am the Newspaper.

Born of the deep, daily need of a Nation—I am the Voice of Now—the incarnate spirit of the Times—Monarch of Things that Are. My "cold type" burns with the fire-blood of human action. I am fed by arteries of wire that girdle the earth. I drink from the cup of every living joy and sorrow. I sleep not—rest not. I know not night, nor day, nor season. I know not death, yet I am born again with every morn—with every noon—with every twilight. I leap into fresh being with every new world's event.

Those who created me cease to be. The brains and hearts' blood that nourish me go the way of human dissolution. Yet I live on and on. I am majestic in my strength, sublime in my power, terrible in my potentialities, yet as democratic as the ragged boy who sells me for a penny. I am the consort of Kings, the partner of capital, the brother of toil, the inspirer of the hopeless, the right arm of the needy, the champion of the oppressed, the conscience of the criminal. I am the epitome of the world's Comedy and Tragedy.

My responsibilities are infinite. I speak, and the world stops to listen. I say the word, and battle flames the horizon. I counsel peace, and the war-lords obey. I am greater than any individual—more powerful than any group. I am the dynamic of Public Opinion. Rightly directed, I am the Creator of Confidence. A builder of happiness in living. I am the teacher of patriotism. I am the hands of the clock of Time—the clarion voice of Civilization.—By Joseph H. Finn.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Should a girl ask young men to call or should the men ask the girls?" asked Gwen.

"If a man shows a girl some attention, she may ask him to call and leave it to him to follow up the invitation by asking for a special night," was her mother's advice.
